

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

TO THE TEXT AND TRANSLATION.

THE History attributed to Abū Ṣalih the Armenian is here edited for the first time, by the kind permission of the Minister of Public Instruction and of the Administrator of the National Library in Paris, from the unique MS. purchased by Vansleb in Egypt in the seventeenth century, and now preserved in that Institution. The present edition is based upon a copy made by the editor from the original, which he afterwards had the advantage of comparing with another copy most liberally placed at his disposal by M. l'Abbé Hyvernat, together with the results of a collation by Professor Ignazio Guidi. To these eminent scholars, therefore, the editor begs to express his deepest gratitude. Professor Margoliouth has also had the goodness to look through both the copy of the text and the translation, and to elucidate many points of difficulty. Mr. Alfred Butler, whose book on the Coptic Churches forms the only work of importance existing on that subject, has generously consented to aid in the interpretation of an obscure author by his knowledge of Coptic history and archaeology; and his contributions to the work are by no means limited to the notes which bear his initials. The system adopted in the transcription of Arabic names is similar to that used in Mr. Butler's Coptic Churches. It does not pretend to be perfect, and among other defects does not express the J of the article before the 'solar letters,' or the shortening of the long final vowel in ḡl and other words before the article, or the Hamzah except in the middle of a word; nor are the nunances in the pronunciation of the vowels indicated; but perhaps no other system is preferable to this. The vocalization of the Arabic forms of names of places is, where possible, that of Yâkût, as being in use at the time of our author.

In the transcription of the text the original has been closely followed, the diacritical points alone being added where they were wanting. Some of the deviations, however, from classical orthography and grammar are indicated by foot-notes on the first few pages of the text.

The existence of the work has long been known to scholars through the references made to 'Abu Selah,' and the passages quoted from him by Eusèbe Renaudot and Étienne Quatremère. Recently also, M. Amélineau, in his Géographie de l'Égypte à l'époque copte, has made some little use of the history of Abû Šâlih, although he has by no means extracted all the information which the book affords on the subject of Egyptian geography.

M. Amélineau seems to be fully aware of the value of the work of Abû Šâlih, at least in certain portions. On the other hand, he seems to have an exaggerated idea of the difficulties presented by the MS. 'It is very badly written in point of language,' he says, 'and most of the diacritical points are wanting; yet I have translated 'the whole of it, in spite of the difficulties which it presents. I believe 'that the MS. is incomplete in several parts, and has been badly 'bound together. The possessor of the MS. has erased the Coptic 'numerical figures at the top of each leaf, in order, no doubt, that 'the absence of part of the MS. might escape notice. Nevertheless, 'the figures are still visible, and enable me to conclude that a con'siderable part of the MS. is wanting, and that the leaves are not arranged in their proper order. Moreover, it is often impossible to translate, because the sense cannot be completed.'

The French scholar here seems to overstate the case. From an examination of the MS. made by the authorities of the National Library, the editor is able to say that, while it is true that no less than twenty-two leaves are wanting at the beginning of the book, the rest of the leaves are bound in their proper order, according to the Coptic ciphers, which are still visible, as M. Amélineau states; with the single exception of the leaf which formed the thirtieth folio of the MS. in its original state, but which is now wanting. The reader, therefore, will understand that there is a lacuna between fol. 8, according to the new or Arabic pagination, and fol. 9, which bears in the MS. the Coptic number 31; and that the words at the beginning of fol. 9, 'This revenue,' &c., do not refer to the preceding estimate of the revenues of Egypt. The owner of the MS. seems to have supplied the first folio himself, and to have given a new pagination in Arabic figures to the remaining portion of the original book, so that folio 23 became folio 2, and so on. It should be added that the Coptic figures are wanting on fol. 38, which formed fol. 60 of the complete MS., and also on the last two folios.

The word ج; on fol. 12a is translated as 'Extreme Unction,' a meaning which the word bears at least in Africa. In late Arabic, however, ج; is also a nomen verbi of ج, and signifies 'to marry' or 'marriage,' so that our author may perhaps here refer to a practice of marrying within the prohibited degrees then existing among the Copts.

The statements of the Coptic Synaxarium, occasionally quoted in the notes to the present edition of Abū Ṣāliḥ, are not guaranteed as being always historically accurate. For instance, the Emperor Diocletian is usually represented, without reference to his colleagues in the empire, as himself carrying on the persecution which goes by his name, although in reality he abdicated two years after the promulgation of the edict which sanctioned and originated it : and, to take another example, St. Theodore is called ‘magister militum,’ although this office was not instituted until the reign of Constantine. Nevertheless valuable traditions of early Church history, and in particular of the great persecution itself, are embodied both in the Synaxarium and in the Coptic Acts of the Martyrs, on which it is partly founded.

INTRODUCTION.

THE sole indication which we possess of the name of our author is to be found in the title inscribed on the first page of the MS. This title, however, was supplied, as it has already been said, by a later hand; and it is, moreover, obviously incomplete. No name is there given to the work, beyond the meagre designation of 'chronicle' or 'history'; and this is so contrary to the rule of Arabic literature that it is enough by itself to prove that the original title had been lost. The author is designated by his praenomen only, as 'Abū Ṣāliḥ the Armenian.' It is a recognized fact in Arabic orthography that the proper name Ṣāliḥ (صالح) is one of those which may by common custom be written defectively without the l; see Vernier, Grammaire arabe, i. p. 91. Hence there is no reason to adopt the form 'Abū Selah,' used by Renaudot, Quatremère, Amélineau, and others. It must, in the absence of further proof, remain doubtful whether 'Abū Ṣāliḥ' can be taken as the true praenomen (kunyah) of the author of the present work. His nationality, on the other hand, may be inferred, not only from the title, but also from the internal evidence of the book, for the lengthy description of the Armenian churches, and of the affairs of the Armenian patriarch, would tend to show that the writer had a special connexion with the Armenian nation; and, although he often speaks as though his sympathies and interests were bound up with those of the Copts, we must remember that this very Armenian patriarch, of whom we have spoken, was consecrated in the presence of Gabriel, the seventieth patriarch of the Copts (Renaudot, Hist. Patr. pp. 507-509); and there are many other proofs of friendly intercourse between the two races. Moreover, on fol. 3 a, the Armenian form of the name Sergius (Սարգիս, Sarkis) is, as Mr. F. C. Conybeare recognizes, correctly transcribed in Arabic as شركيس, Sharkīs, and explained as being equivalent to سرجحه, Sirjah. It may be maintained, therefore, as a probability, that the author of the work was Armenian by nationality. It is surprising, however, that M. Amélineau says that 'Abou Selah (sic) visited Egypt at the moment when the Armenians were all-powerful in that country.' It is surely much more probable that Abū Ṣalīḥ, if that was his name, was not a mere visitor to Egypt, but rather a member of the Armenian colony, the ancestors of which had settled there at the end of the eleventh century of our era, under the protection of Badr al-Jamālī, the Armenian vizier to the caliph Al-Mustansīr; and that our author had been born and bred in the country. This would explain his Arabic name, the fact of his writing in Arabic, and his familiarity with the history of Egypt. As for his being in Egypt at a time of Armenian preponderance in the state, the facts are precisely the contrary. There is no proof that the Armenians were in special favour under the three last of the Fatimide caliphs, and the greater part of our author's life must have been passed during a time when the Armenians in Egypt had succumbed to the misfortunes which overtook them at the time of the Kurdish invasion, and had been much reduced in numbers. Of these misfortunes our author was an eye-witness.

The work itself affords sufficient internal evidence of the date of its composition, for the author constantly refers to events which, he says, happened in his own time, and to incidents in his own life, of which he gives us the date. Thus on fol. 4 b he tells us of an interview which he had at Cairo with the physician Abu 'l-Kāsim al-'Asqalānī, in A. H. 568 =A. D. 1173. Again on fol. 61 a he mentions a visit which he paid in A. H. 569=A. D. 1174 to the monastery of Nahyā. But the latest date given in the book is that of the death of Mark ibn al-Ḳanbar in the month of Amshīr A. M. 924=Jan.–Feb., A. D. 1208. The composition of the work, therefore, may confidently be assigned to the first years of the thirteenth century of our era, when the writer had probably reached a considerable age.

In spite of these distinct indications of date, however, M. Amélineau speaks as if the work had been composed at a much later period, for he begins his account of Abū Ṣalīḥ as follows: 'I must also speak of an author who wrote in Arabic, and who has left us a history of the churches and monasteries of Egypt, written in the year 1054 of the Martyrs, that is to say in the year 1338 of our era. He was called

'Abou Selah (sic), and was an Armenian by nationality' (Géogr. p. xxiv). The fact is that M. Amélineau is here speaking of the date at which the copy, now in the National Library, was made; but his readers may certainly be pardoned if they understand him to be giving the date of the composition of the work. It is quite true that the copy was finished on Ba'ūnah 2, A. M. 1054=Dhu 'l-Ka'dah 8, A. H. 738=May 27, A. D. 1348, as the copyist himself informs us in his note at the end of the book.

The title supplied by a later hand on fol. 1 b of the MS. describes the book as a 'history, containing an account of the districts and fiefs of 'Egypt.' As, however, the principal part of the work is taken up with an account of churches and monasteries, with regard to which it supplies us with much original information, I have furnished the new title of 'Churches and Monasteries of Egypt.' This new title is in accordance with the description of the MS. in the catalogue of the National Library, where it is called 'Histoire des églises et des 'monastères de l'Égypte.' The object of the author would seem to have been to collect information of all sorts about Egypt and the neighbouring countries; but he evidently desired above all to describe the churches and monasteries, and to narrate incidents of ecclesiastical history. It is to those concerned with this last-named branch of study that the work of Abū Ṣalih should be of special interest.

The only work now existing in Arabic of a similar character to the present work is that portion of the Khiṣāt of Al-Makrizī which contains an account of the Coptic churches and monasteries, and which is affixed as an appendix to this volume. Other Mahometan writers, however, besides Al-Makrizī, composed works, which are now lost, on the subject of the Christian monasteries, and the most celebrated of them was Ash-Shābushtī, who is quoted by our author and also by Al-Kazwīnī, Yākūt, Al-Makrizī, and others.

Indeed, one of the most interesting features of the present work is the constant reference which it makes to the relations between the Christians of Egypt and their Mahometan fellow-countrymen. These relations, naturally, varied in their character from time to time. There were periods of disturbance, marked by outrages committed by the stronger race upon the weaker, by riots, incendiaryism, murders, or even by systematic persecution, as in the reign of the caliph Al-Hâkim. But there were also periods when the two races lived peacefully side by side, and the adherents of the two creeds were on the best of terms with one another. Sometimes the Muslim governors would authorize and even assist in the restoration of the churches, contrary as this was to the written law of Islam. Mahometans were in some places allowed to be present at the celebration of the Christian liturgy, although the stricter among the Copts regarded this as a profanation. One of the most wealthy and magnificent princes that have ever ruled Egypt, Khamârawaih, the son of Ahmad ibn Tâlûn, used to spend hours in silent admiration before the mosaics, representing the Virgin and Child, attended by Angels, and surrounded by the Twelve Apostles, in the Melkite church at the monastery of Al-Kusair, where, moreover, he built a loggia in order that he might sit there with his friends to enjoy the scenery, and, it must be confessed, also to quaff the good wine, prepared by the monks and fully appreciated by the laxer followers of the Arabian prophet.

The present work in its existing form is an abridgment of the original, as the copyist himself informs us in his final note. He adds that his abridgment has been unsuccessfully carried out, and while we may admire his modesty, we must of necessity agree with him on this point. Nothing could be worse than the present form of the work, which resembles rather a collection of undigested notes than a deliberate composition in its finished shape. That feature of the book which it is most difficult to understand is the repetition of passages on the same subject, and sometimes almost in the same words. We meet with a short account of some place, which is then dropped, and the history proceeds to the discussion of other matters, only to recur some pages further on to the subject which it had apparently left. Thus, for instance, the passage on the Fayyûm on fol. 18 is repeated in slightly different terms on fol. 70; the description of Bûsîr Banâ and other places on fol. 17 occurs again, almost word for word, on fol. 68; and often after leaving a place, we are brought back to it and receive further information about it. There appears to be no arrangement or order in the work at all.

We do not know what may have been the subjects which occupied the first score of leaves, now lost to us. It may, perhaps, be conjectured that they were filled with an account of the churches of Lower Egypt and Cairo, and of the monasteries of the Wâdî Habib, which could hardly be neglected in such a work. Probably also we have lost part of the history of the Armenians in Egypt.

The book, as we have it at present, opens with an account of the Armenian monastery and churches at Al-Basâtîn, a little to the south of Cairo. The latter buildings consisted of a 'Great Church,' or main building, to which a smaller church or chapel was attached after the manner of churches in Egypt. Sometimes these dependent churches were on the same floor as the principal edifice, and sometimes they formed an upper story to it. The mention of the Armenian monastery and churches leads our author to a digression on the recent history of the Armenians in Egypt, and on the misfortunes which had befallen them during his own lifetime. He then starts off upon quite a different matter, namely the revenues of the Coptic church and of the Egyptian rulers; but this is a subject to which he recurs quite unexpectedly in one or two subsequent paragraphs. Then comes what is almost the only uninterrupted narrative or description in the book, that is the account of the so-called heretic Mark ibn al-Kanbar. Next follows a list of certain remarkable features of Egypt and of distinguished men who have lived in that country; but in the middle of this is inserted a note on the churches of Bûşîr Banâ and other places. Then, after a note on the boundaries of Egypt, comes an account of the city of Al-Fustât and its churches, which would seem to be fairly systematic and complete were it not for notes on king Aftûtîs, the revenues of Egypt, Nebuchadnezzar and the patriarch Demetrius, inserted in the middle of it without any apparent occasion for them. After describing the churches of Al-Fustât, our author proceeds up the Nile, noticing the churches and monasteries in the towns and villages, principally, of course, on the more populous western bank; but he does not go straight on in his journey; he frequently dashes from south to north, and then again from north to south in a manner which would horrify us in a modern guide to the Nile; and he still keeps up his trick of inserting notes from time to time on perfectly irrelevant matters. After reaching Nubia, our author returns again down the Nile for a short visit to certain places in Egypt which he had passed over; and then he suddenly takes us to Abyssinia, to India, to North-Africa, and even to Spain, and the shores of the Atlantic, ending up with south-western Arabia, and with the mention of certain ancient cities, the foundation of which is referred to the remotest antiquity.

The most valuable part of the present work is probably that part which the author based upon his own experience, and did not borrow from other writers. Much of the information with which he supplies us on the churches and monasteries of Egypt seems to be of this character. Thus he himself tells us that great part of his account of the Monastery of Nahyā is derived from what he saw and heard during a visit which he paid there for devotional purposes in the year 569 of the Hegira. A young monk whom he met in the monastery on this occasion seems to have been questioned by him, and to have discoursed to him at some length on the history of the place. It may be taken for granted that our author had also visited in person the churches and monasteries of Cairo and its neighbourhood, and had made similar enquiries of the priests and monks as to the foundation and restoration of these buildings and other matters of interest concerning them. But how far our author had travelled up the Nile is doubtful; and perhaps he had not himself seen the great White Monastery of Saint Sinuthius, opposite to Ikhmīm. If he had been in that neighbourhood, he would surely also have spoken of the 'Red Monastery.' Similarly, it is probable that he had not paid a personal visit to the Monastery of Saint Anthony near the Red Sea, for if he had, he would have given a fuller account of the neighbouring Monastery of Saint Paul.

Some of our author's statements with regard to these churches and monasteries which he had not himself seen, probably rest upon the testimony of some of his friends and acquaintances whom he questioned on the subject. Part, however, of what he tells us is borrowed from the Book of the Monasteries of Ash-Shābushtī, a work in prose and verse much read at the time. The author, Abu 'l-Husain 'Alī ibn Muhammad ash-Shābushtī, was a Mahometan, and his work is a proof of the constant practice on the part of Muslims of resorting to the Christian monasteries, for the purpose of sauntering in their gardens, sitting in their galleries and loggias, and drinking their wines. Besides Ash-Shâbushtî, other writers, such as Abû Bakr Muhammad al-Khâlidî, Abû 'Uthmân Sa'd al-Khâlidî, and Abu 'l-Faraj al-Isfahânî, composed works on the monasteries in the course of the tenth century of our era, and Ibn Khallikân tells us that many other books were written in the Arabic language on the same subject. The work of Ash-Shâbushtî contained an account of all the monasteries of Al-'Irâk, Al-Mauşil, Mesopotamia, Syria, and Egypt, with all the poems composed on them, and a history of the events which concerned them. It is unfortunate that this work is lost, and only known to us through quotations made from it by other writers. Ash-Shâbushtî, who is said to have died at Al-Fustât or 'Old Cairo' in A.H. 388 or 390, was private librarian and reader to the Fatimide caliph Al-'Azîz, and his agreeable manners and conversation led the sovereign to make him his constant boon-companion. It is in accordance with this character that he wrote of the monasteries chiefly as places for enjoying pleasant social intercourse and drinking wine. The surname Ash-Shâbushtî is difficult to explain, and Ibn Khallikân says that he 'repeatedly made researches to 'discover the origin of the surname, but that all his pains were fruitless, 'until he found that the chamberlain to the Dailamite prince Washmaghir 'ibn Ziyâr was also called Ash-Shâbushtî, from which it appears that 'this is a Dailamite family name.'

Part of our author's information with regard to the churches and monasteries of Egypt, and to the ecclesiastical history of that country, is derived from the Biographies of the Patriarchs, compiled in the ninth century by Severus, bishop of Al-Ushmûnain, and from the continuation of the Biographies by a later writer. The name of this work is well known to scholars, because Renaudot based upon it the greater part of his Historia Patriarcharum Alexandrinorum Jacobitarum; — but the work itself has never been published, either in the original Arabic or in a translation, although copies of it are to be found in European libraries. The publication of this work is much to be desired, as it affords a great mass of information on the ecclesiastical history of Egypt, since the schism of Dioscorus, which is not supplied from any other source; and although Renaudot has revealed to the learned world part of its contents, there is a very large part only to be known at present through a study of the original Arabic MSS. It is from these patriarchal biographies that our author borrows the greater part of what he tells us on the subject of the history of the Coptic patriarchs, and part of what he says on the churches and monasteries. It is thence that he takes, for instance, his account of the visit of Al-Kâsim to the White Monastery.

The Patriarchal Biographies of Severus of Al-Ushmûnain are based in their earlier portion, as he himself tells us, on Greek and Coptic documents preserved in the ancient Monastery of Saint Macarius in the Nitrian Valley. In the later part the compiler has inserted the works of certain writers almost without change, such as the biography of the patriarch Khâ'il or Michael by John the deacon, a contemporary and acquaintance of that patriarch, and a considerable portion of the series written by George, archdeacon and secretary of the patriarch Simon. Many of our author's quotations are taken from the life of the patriarch Michael.

Another writer, to whom our author is considerably indebted, is better known to European readers, since his history was published in 1654-6 by Pococke, at Oxford. This is Sa'id ibn al-Bâtrîk, the Melkite patriarch of Alexandria, whose name was translated into Greek in the form Eutychius. He was a famous physician, as well as a priest, and composed a medical work in addition to his historical labours. His chief work, however, was that from which our author quotes, namely the Nâzm al-Jauhar or Row of Jewels, to which the European editor has given the Latin title of Eutychii Annales. It is a history, beginning with the earliest events narrated in the Bible, and continued down to the author's own time; but its most valuable part is the ecclesiastical chronicle of Egypt which it contains. The author was born at Al-Fustât in A. H. 263=A. D. 877, became Melkite patriarch of Alexandria in A. H. 321=A. D. 932, and died in the latter city in A. H. 328=A. D. 940.

Our author makes more references than one to a writer whom he calls Maḥbûb ibn Kustânîn al-Manbajî, that is 'Maḥbûb, son of Constantine, a native of the city of Manbaj.' This writer also bore the Greek name Agapius, corresponding to his Arabic appellation. He composed a history of the world in two parts, of which a copy of the first part is preserved at Oxford, and a copy of the second part, relating events from the Incarnation onwards, exists at Florence. The latter work, however, has been carried on by a continuator down to the year A. D. 1312, and this has occasioned the erroneous belief that Maḥbūb himself lived in the fourteenth century. Maḥbūb is a writer several times quoted by Al-Makrīzī in the first part of his history. According to the Florentine MS., Maḥbūb or Agapius was a Jacobite or monophysite bishop of Manbaj.

Use was also made in the work now edited of a History of the Councils, of the homilies of the patriarch Theophilus, and of a Guide to the Festivals. It seems that there were several of such Guides in the ecclesiastical literature of Egypt, and the Synaxaria were partly based upon them. Our author was, moreover, acquainted with some at least of the biblical books, and he quotes from the Pentateuch, the Prophets, and the Gospels.

He would seem to have read the romance of Aurā, which still exists in Arabic, and was probably translated from the Coptic.

The curious work called the Book of Clement or Apocalypse of Peter is also quoted by our author at the end of his history. Copies of this work exist in Europe, as, for instance, in Paris and at Oxford.

Our author does not tell us whence he derived his accounts of Nubia, of Abyssinia, and of the Indian Christians. Of Nubia he may have read in the work of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ahmad ibn Sulā'im, quoted by Al-Makrīzī. Of Abyssinia he may have learnt something from the envoys who frequently arrived in Egypt from that country, as bearers of despatches addressed to the Coptic patriarch. Of India he may have received information from the mouths of Christian travellers; or perhaps those Indian priests who at the end of the seventh century came to Egypt, to beg the Coptic patriarch to send out a bishop to their fellow-countrymen, may have left behind them some account of the state of Christianity in India.

In those parts of his work which treat of the general history of Egypt, our author chiefly follows Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakām and Al-Kindī. Copies of the Futūh Miṣr or History of the Conquest of Egypt by the Muslims, composed by the former of these two writers, exist in Paris.

The author, 'Abd ar-Rahmán 'Abd Alláh ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, seems to have written at the end of the second century of the Hegira, but the work was continued by his disciples, and in the Paris MSS. goes down to the end of the third century. There is little legend in the work, which consists chiefly of pure history, and in this respect compares favourably with later histories, such as those of Al-Makrızí and As-Suyútí. Al-Kindí, who is called by Hájí Khalfah the first Arab historian of Egypt, died in A. H. 247=A. D. 860, or according to others in A. H. 350=A. D. 961. The title of his great work was Khiṣāt Miṣr or Topography and History of Miṣr, its object being to describe the foundation of the city of Miṣr and its subsequent alterations. This work seems to have been the basis and model of the later works named Khiṣāt, such as that of Al-Makrızí. Two other works of Al-Kindí exist in manuscript at the British Museum, namely a History of the Governors of Egypt and a History of the Cadis. Al-Kindí also wrote a book called Fadl' il Miṣr or Excellences of Egypt, which is quoted by our author more than once. The full name of Al-Kindí is Abú 'Umar Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf al-Kindí. Some of his works were continued by Abú Muḥammad al-Hasan ibn Ibráhím ibn Zúlák, who died A. H. 387=A. D. 997, and who is once quoted by our author, through a copyist's error, as An-Nasr ibn Zúlák.

The great history of Aṭ-Ṭabarí had also formed the subject of our author's studies, as he shows by his reference towards the end of the work.

Finally, our author, although a Christian, shows on more than one occasion that he is not unacquainted with the Koran itself, thus giving a fresh proof of the friendly feeling which existed between Christians and Muslims at the beginning of the thirteenth century of our era.

From the account given above of the plan, or rather want of plan, of Abú Ṣalih's work, it will be seen that it resembles a note-book which has not yet been put into order, rather than a formal composition. It is clear then that such a book could hardly be worth publication were it not that, in the words of the author, 'he has here collected information which is not to be found in the work of any other writer.'

The present work is full of allusions to the history of Egypt, and especially to the more important periods, such as the Mahometan conquest, the overthrow of the Omeyyad dynasty, the rule of Ahmad ibn Tâlûn and his son Khamârawah, and the invasion by the Fatimide caliph Al-Mu'izz. The conquest of Egypt began in A.H. 18, when 'Amr ibn al-'Âs entered the country by the Syrian frontier, and subdued the imperial forces in a battle near Pelusium, where the Arab town of Al-Faramâ afterwards stood. 'Amr then advanced upon the fortress of Babylon, about ten miles to the south of Heliopolis, which was, after a long siege, ceded to him by the treachery of George son of Mennas, the 'Muâkaukîs.' After this it was necessary to attack the capital of the country, Alexandria, and here again serious resistance was offered to the Muslims. The siege of Alexandria lasted several months, so that the conquest of Egypt was not completed until the first of Muâharram, A.H. 20 (A.D. 641). The conqueror did not, however, select Alexandria as his capital, but chose a spot easier of access from Mecca and Medina, namely the Fortress of Babylon and its neighbourhood, as the site of the new city which he founded and named Fustât Miṣr.

From the time of the conquest, Egypt was governed by wâlis, appointed by the caliphs, who rarely visited the country themselves. The last of the Omeyyad caliphs, however, Marwân II, who reigned from A.H. 126 to 133, took refuge in Egypt from the armies of the new claimant to the caliphate, As-Saffâh, the Abbaside. The Khorassanian troops of the latter pursued Marwân, who set fire to the city of Fustât Miṣr, and, having crossed the Nile, destroyed all the boats upon the river in order to stop the progress of the enemy. A vivid picture of this disastrous conflict is given us by an eye-witness, the contemporary biographer of the Coptic patriarch Michael, whose life is included in the compilation of Severus of Al-Ushmûnain. The Khorassanians soon found boats with which to cross the river; and they pursued Marwân as far as Bûṣîr Kûridûs, near the entrance to the Fayyûm, where they put him to death. His head was sent round the country as a proof of the extinction of the Omeyyad dynasty and the victory of the Abbasides.

The Omeyyad caliphs had resided at Damascus, and the Abbasides established their court in A.D. 750 at the newly-erected city of Bagdad, so that Egypt was still ruled by wâlis, who, on account of their remoteness from the seat of the central government, soon became practically independent. One of the most celebrated governors of Egypt was Ahmad ibn Tûlûn, who ruled the country from A. H. 254 to 270. By this time the importance of the city of Fustât Miṣr had greatly diminished. The Ḥamrâs or quarters to the north of Al-Fustât, founded at the time of the Arab conquest, had fallen into decay, and the ground had become bare of houses; but upon the flight of Marwân into Egypt, the Abbaside troops had settled upon it, and gave it its new name of Al-'Askar, and here the emirs who ruled Egypt resided. It was in this quarter, now called the quarter of Ibn Tûlûn, that Ahmad built his great mosque. He no longer, however, chose to reside here, but founded the new quarter of Al-Ḳatâ'i', which extended from the lowest spurs of the Muḳatṭam hills to the mosque of Ibn Tûlûn. Neither Al-'Askar nor Al-Ḳatâ'i' was destined to exist long. When the Fatimide caliph Al-Mu'izz sent his general Jauhar to invade Egypt, the latter demolished the houses between Al-Fustât and his own new city of Cairo, which formed these two quarters, and they thus entirely disappeared, save for the Christian monasteries and churches, which, as Abû Ṣâliḥ tells us, still remained in the Ḥamrâs, as the antiquaries of Egypt continued to call the place.

Between the fall of the Omeyyads and the appearance of the Fatimides, it would seem that the Christians of Egypt enjoyed greater prosperity than had been their lot during the later days of the fallen dynasty. Nor do the Fatimide caliphs appear to have treated their Christian subjects with harshness, with the notable exception of the fanatical Al-Ḥâkim, the great persecutor of the Copts and Syrians. The work now published is full of instances of benevolence shown to the Copts, and practical favours conferred upon them by Mahometan rulers and officials.

The work of Abû Ṣâliḥ was composed immediately after a great revolution in the affairs of Egypt, following the invasion of the Kurds and Ghuzz under the leadership of Shirkûh and Saladin. This invasion was due to the unscrupulous intrigues of Shâwar as-Sâ'dî, the vizier of the last of the Fatimide caliphs, Al-'Āḍid li-dîn illâh. Shâwar had been in the service of a former vizier, Aṣ-Ṣâliḥ ibn Ruzzîk, who appointed him wâli of Upper Egypt, a post only second in importance to the vizierate ; and in this capacity Shâwar had shown much ability, and gained great influence over the principal officials of the country. On the death of As-Ṣâlih, however, in the year 556 (A. D. 1161), his son and successor in the vizierate, Al-'Âdil, jealous of Shâwar's influence, deprived him of his office, in spite of the warnings against such a step which had been uttered by Ibn Ruzzîk upon his death-bed. Shâwar assembled a body of troops, marched to Cairo early in the year 558, and, on the flight of Al-'Âdil, pursued him and put him to death, himself assuming the reins of government as vizier, under the nominal supremacy of the Fatimide caliph.

In the month of Ramadân of the same year, however, a fresh aspirant to the vizierate appeared in the person of Ad-Dirghâm, who, collecting a body of troops, forced Shâwar to flee from Cairo, and put himself in his place. Thus, in the course of the year 558, the post of vizier was held by three statesmen in succession. Shâwar, however, took the bold step of making his way to Syria, and applying for aid to Nûr ad-Dîn, the most powerful Mahometan prince of his time. Accordingly, in the month of Jumâdâ the First of the year 559, Nûr ad-Dîn despatched a body of Turkish and Kurdish troops to Egypt under the command of a Kurdish general, then in his service, named Asad ad-Dîn Shîrkûh. On the arrival of the army of Nûr ad-Dîn, Dirghâm was defeated and slain, and Shâwar was restored to his post of vizier. He, however, now refused to perform his part of the contract, and would neither grant money nor land to the troops, nor send to Nûr ad-Dîn that portion of the revenues of Egypt which he had promised. Upon this, the Kurdish general seized the city of Bilbais, and great part of the province of Ash-Sharkiyah. The unscrupulous vizier, however, instead of satisfying the just expectations of his auxiliaries, sent messengers to the natural enemy of his countrymen and his religion, the Frankish king of Jerusalem, offering him a sum of money if he would defend Egypt against Nûr ad-Dîn and his troops, who, he said, had formed the design of conquering the valley of the Nile. Complying with this request, Amaury led a body of troops to Egypt and besieged Shîrkûh at Bilbais during three months, but without success in spite of the low walls and the absence of a moat. Suddenly the news came that Nûr ad-Dîn had captured Hârim, and was marching upon Bâniyâs. On hearing this, the Franks hastened homewards to defend their own country, after inducing the besieged general, who was ignorant of any cause for the Frankish retreat, to make terms by which he bound himself to leave Egypt also.

In the year 562, Asad ad-Dîn Shîrkûh was again sent to Egypt by Nûr ad-Dîn, who was now filled with the desire of subduing that country, and had obtained from the Abbaside caliph Al-Mustadî a sanction for his enterprise, which made it a crusade with the object of extinguishing the rival dynasty of the Fatimides. Amaury, however, was again induced by a bribe to come to the rescue of Shâwar and his nominal master Al-'Âdîd, and this time actually entered Cairo, while a sandstorm destroyed part of the army of Shîrkûh, who was forced to retreat. In the same campaign, part of Amaury's army was defeated by Shîrkûh, and Alexandria submitted to the Kurdish general; but finally the latter retired from Egypt after a blockade which drove him to make terms with the king of the Franks.

The third and final campaign of Shîrkûh in Egypt began in the month of Rabi' the First of the year 564. The Frankish king had soon broken off his alliance with the Fatimide caliph, on the plea of treachery on the part of the Egyptians, and making a sudden descent upon Al-Faramâ, the ancient Pelusium, he had put the inhabitants to the sword. Shâwar now once more asked for help from Nûr ad-Dîn, whom he had treated so unfaithfully, and Shîrkûh with his nephew Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb Şalâh ad-Dîn, known to Europe as Saladin, led an army to the frontiers of Egypt, where they found the Frankish troops who had been detained there by a stratagem on the part of Shâwar, and who now had to beat a hasty and disastrous retreat. Shîrkûh now took possession of Egypt, under the sanction of the Fatimide caliph, whose nominal rule he for the present maintained. The assassination of Shâwar, however, was a natural and rapid consequence of the Kurdish occupation; and Shîrkûh became vizier in his place. After filling this post for two months and five days, Shîrkûh died, and was succeeded in the vizierate by his nephew Saladin.

The history of Saladin is well known to European readers. He was the son of Ayyûb the son of Shâdî, a member of the noble Kurdish tribe of Rawâdiyah, natives of Duwîn, a town of Adharbaijân, and was born A. H. 532 at Takrît, where his father and uncle were in the service of Bîhrûz, who was acting as governor of the district under the Seljucide sultan Masûd ibn Muhammâd Ghîyâth ad-Dîn. When Saladin became vizier of Egypt he at once began to give free rein to his ambition, and to display his capabilities for administration and for military activity. By his amiable demeanour and by promises of money, he won the emirs and the soldiery to his side, and was soon able to carry out the project of extinguishing the Fatimide dynasty, and once more proclaiming the Abbaside in Egypt as the true caliph. In the year 567, on the 2nd day of the month of Muharram, the Khuṭbah of Al-'Âdîd was stopped by command of Saladin, and the name of Al-Mustadî was put in its place. The last of the Fatimide caliphs, however, was seriously ill at the time of this change, and never knew that his high position had been lost. A few days later the deposed caliph was dead.

Saladin now took possession of the palace of the caliphate. Treasures of fabulous value are said to have been found there, hoarded up by the rulers of so large a part of the Mahometan world during two centuries of religious and political supremacy. We read of a carbuncle weighing seventeen dirhams or twelve mithkâls, of a pearl of unequalled size, and of an emerald four finger's breadths in length and one in width. There was also a most valuable collection of books, in spite of the loss of a great portion of the library of the Fatimide caliphs in the reign of Al-Mustansîr. Saladin, however, sold all the treasures of the palace. The rejoicings at Bagdad were great when the news came that the Abbaside caliph had been prayed for in the mosques of Egypt, and that the rival dynasty had been overthrown; and the city was decorated while the revolution was publicly announced during several days. Al-Mustadî sent robes of honour to Nûr ad-Dîn, and to his general Saladin in Egypt.

The effect of these political changes upon Egypt in general, and upon the Copts in particular, had been striking. On the approach of the Franks, Shâwar ordered that Miṣr should be burnt, and that the inhabitants should remove to Cairo. The results of this burning of the already decaying city, which had suffered so greatly from the famine and plague in the reign of Al-Mustansîr, are noticed on several occasions in the work attributed to Abû Şâlih. Churches and monasteries were destroyed, although they were afterwards in part restored. When the Kurdish general Shirkûh had taken possession of Egypt in the name of Nûr ad-Dîn, a considerable part of the land was taken away from its owners and settled upon the Kurds and Ghuzz, who formed the invader's army. In this way the Coptic church lost, for the time, all, or great part of, her landed property.

The Ghuzz, who are so often mentioned in this work, and who seem to have formed perhaps the largest and most efficient contingent in the army of Shirkûh and Saladin, were a Turkish tribe whose original home lay 'beyond the river' of Central Asia, in the region which the Romans called Transoxiana. They removed, however, into the regions of Mesopotamia in the first centuries of Islam, and in the twelfth century entered the service of Nûr ad-Dîn.

The theory of land tenure among the Muslims was that all the land had been placed by divine providence at the disposal of the prophet Mahomet and next of his successors the caliphs, who had the right to settle it upon whom they would. Acting upon this principle the prophet himself settled land in Syria upon Tamîm ad-Dârî, even before the conquest of the country. Some of the titles to landed property in Egypt at the time of our author, and later, were traced back to the earliest caliphs. In general a rent or land-tax was paid to the government in return for such property; but in later times a system of military fiefs was introduced, similar to those held under the feudal system of western Europe. The present work supplies us with several instances of the rent paid for land held under the Fatimide caliphs.

The philological features of the present work form a subject too large to be discussed in an introduction, and would be better treated in a grammar of the Middle Arabic language. It must be remembered, however, that the author is represented in the title as an Armenian, and that his acquaintance with Arabic was probably imperfect. It is also quite clear that the copyist was no more equal to the task of correctly transcribing, than to that of judiciously abbreviating the book. Apart from these considerations, the orthography and grammar of the MS.

seen to be those of other MSS. of the same period. Among purely orthographical faults ل is sometimes written for ى, س for ص, and ظ for ض; once or twice even ج for ش. The distinctions of case have been almost entirely lost, and the accusative is written where the nominative should be, and vice versa. In the case of the word ابی = ابی the confusion of cases is especially frequent. Mistakes in gender are also common, especially in the demonstrative pronouns هذہ for تالٰه, هنّا for ذلٰک, and vice versa. The dual sometimes appears, especially in the numerals, even when they are not in the oblique case or construct state, with the termination -ی- for -ین- or -ان-; compare Spitta, Grammatik des arabischen Vulgärdialectes von Aegypten, p. 132, where such forms as 'نُلْثَنِي' 'two-thirds,' 'خُمْسَنِي' 'two-fifths,' are said to be used in all cases and states in the official language of the Divans, and to have passed thence into the vulgar tongue. At other times the oblique case in -ین- is used for the nominative, just as in the plural -ین- takes the place of -ون-. On fol. 64 b an adjective in the feminine singular is placed in attribution to a dual masculine, according to the rule in modern Arabic, although a few lines afterwards the masc. plur. is used. On fol. 93 a there is a noticeable form of the 2nd pers. plur. masc. of the perf., viz. سجنتموا instead of the more modern سجنتوا; but this may be a proof of the greater purity of the Arabic spoken in the Oases. It is a peculiarity of the present work that in certain parts the language is far more classical than in others; but this may be because the author has in some places closely followed some writer of the first ages of Islam, such as Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam or Al-Kindī, and in other places has composed his sentences for himself.

CHURCHES AND MONASTERIES

COMPOSED BY

THE SHAIKH ABŪ ṢĀLIH,

CONTAINING AN ACCOUNT OF THE DISTRICTS AND FIEFS OF EGYPT.

Armenian Monastery and Churches at Al-Basātīn.

Section I. Let us begin¹ with the help and guidance of God. In this our own time, namely at the beginning of the year 564² (Oct. 4, A.D. 1168–Sept. 23, 1169), took place the rebuilding of the [Armenian] church, named after Saint James, which stands in the district of Al-Basātīn³, one of the districts of Egypt, in the neighbourhood of the hills. This was in the days of * * *, who was an emir⁴, and ruled Egypt on behalf of the Fol. 2 a

caliph. He was a friend to all Christians, whether high or low. He received a monthly revenue of ten dinars¹ from the lands [of the monastery] which he held in fief². He then undertook and carried out the reconstruction of this church of Saint James, which had been burnt down; he built for it, above the sanctuary³, a lofty dome, which could be seen from afar; he erected arches and vaults; and he completed the whole by setting up the great doors. These, however, were afterwards carried away, and accordingly he renewed them once more; the same thing happened a second time, and again he renewed the doors. He also completed the rebuilding of the [adjacent] church, which, however, he did not cause to be consecrated, nor was the liturgy celebrated in it. When the emir died, he was buried in this church. Now the monastery, [in which this church is contained,] stands in the midst of gardens and plots of vegetables and cornfields; and it is reckoned among the most charming of resorts for pleasure.

§ When the Ghuzz⁴ and the Kurds took possession of the land of cannot really belong to the year A. H. 564, as they would seem to do if the date here given could be relied upon, it may be suggested that this emir was the Armenian Badr al-Jamâli, who was vizier to the caliph Al-Mustansîr from A. H. 467 to 487 = A. D. 1075-1094, and was known as Amîr al-Juyâsh or emir of the troops, i. e. commander-in-chief. On account of his nationality and religion, Badr was a benefactor to the Christians of Egypt. Cf. Renaudot (Hist. Patr. pp. 459 and 508), who speaks of the Armenian settlement in Egypt in the time of Badr, mentioned by our author on fol. 47 b.

Egypt, in the month of Rabiⁱ the Second, in the year 564 (A. D. 1168-9), calamities well known to all men overtook the Armenians¹, who were then settled in Egypt. Their patriarch², together with the Armenian monks, was driven away from that monastery of which we have been speaking; its door was blocked up, and those churches remained empty, nor did any one venture to approach them.

§ Al-Bustân [or Al-Basâtîn] was next allotted as a fief to the Faâkîh Al-Bahâ³ 'Alî, the Damascene, who set apart for the Armenians the church of John the Baptist, built over⁴ the church of the Pure Lady⁵, in the Hârah Zawilah⁶; and here the patriarch dwelt during the year 564 (A. D. 1168-9).

seems to consider them as two names of the same nation. Perhaps there is some confusion between الفز الارمن, which would be correct, and الفز الاراد.

⁶ The quarter of Cairo called Hârah Zawilah, and now Zuwaïlah, was founded

Fol. 2 b

The Armenian Patriarch.

§ This patriarch had been bishop of Itṣīḥ¹; and afterwards, during the caliphate of Al-Hāfiẓ², he conceived the idea³ of becoming patriarch by means of money which he gave in bribes. He made an agreement with Al-Hāfiẓ, binding himself to give instruction in historical matters to the caliph, who granted him permission to appear at the palace of the caliph, together with the emirs and officers of state, on two days in the week, namely Monday and Thursday⁴, and also on festivals, to pay his respects, and to bring any new information that he had discovered. In this way, during his visits to the Emerald Palace⁵, the patriarch imparted to Al-Hāfiẓ all the results of his researches among biographies by the Berber tribe of Zawīlah, who assisted Jauhar, the general of the Fatimide caliph Al-Mu'izz, in the conquest of Egypt, A. D. 969, and the foundation of Cairo. The Bāb Zawīlah or Zuwaīlah is one of the principal gates of the city. See Al-Maḳrīzī, Khiṭat, Būlāk, A. H. 1270=A. D. 1854, vol. ii. p. ፩; Ibn Dukmāk, Kitāb al-Intiqār li-wādītah 'ikd al-amqār, Būlāk, A. H. 1310=A. D. 1893, v. p. ፻.

³ تخيّل should be تخيّل.

⁴ These were the two days of public reception at the palace during the rule of the Fatimide caliphs. See Al-Maḳrīzī, Khiṭat, i. p. ٣٨١.

⁵ The Emerald Palace (الزمرد قصر الزمرد) was part of the Great Palace (القصر الكبير) of the Fatimide caliphs, which stood in the east of Cairo, and was founded by Jauhar in A. H. 358=A. D. 969. The name was taken from the Emerald Gate near which this palace stood. See Al-Maḳrīzī, Khiṭat, i. pp. ٤٠٤, ٤٠٥, ٤٠٦; cf. p. ٣٨٤ ff.

and histories of wars, and chronicles and annals of former rulers, and carried on intercourse of this kind with Al-Hâfiż until the death of the latter, which took place in the month of Jumâda the Second, in the year 544 (A.D. 1149).

§ Outside this monastery¹, and in its neighbourhood, beside the pottery, there stands a small church, which was rebuilt in the caliphate of Al-Âmir² bi-ahkâmi 'llah, for the use of the Melkites, instead of the church which had stood in the Hârah Zawilah but was wrecked in the same caliphate, and later, namely in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiż, was transformed into a mosque. Abû 'l-Barakât ibn al-Laith wrote verses on the subject of this church which was thus restored. It was built upon vaults, and beneath it there was a burying-place for the dead.

§ On account of the ruin brought upon the Armenians by the Ghuzz and the Kurds, their patriarch left Egypt and departed to Jerusalem. He took with him seventy-five sacred³ books, among which was a copy of the Four Gospels with illuminations⁴ in colours and gold, representing

See Introduction.

³ The books here spoken of were perhaps brought by Gregory (see note on fol. 2 a) from Armenia to Egypt. See Renaudot, Hist. Patr. p. 461, and Ter-Mikelian, Die armen. Kirche, &c. p. 84.

⁴ Probably the miniatures here spoken of were the work of Byzantine or Syrian artists. Native Armenian miniatures are not met with earlier than the thirteenth century. See Strzygowski, Das Etschmiadzin Evangeliar, 1891, p. 87. A native writer of the eighth century says that all figure-painting in Armenia was the work of Greek artists (ibid. p. 77 f.). The Armenian gospels of Echmiadzin, of A.D. 989, have Syrian miniatures of an earlier date inserted at the beginning and end. An Armenian book of the Gospels now at San Lazzaro, Venice, and ascribed to the end of the tenth century, contains Byzantine miniatures representing scenes from the life of Christ (ibid. p. 76). Another Armenian MS. of the same date contains a figure of the Evangelist Saint Luke with a Greek title (ΑΛΟΚΑΣ), proving the nationality of its designer (ibid. p. 77). A similar employment of Byzantine artists was customary in the neighbouring country of Georgia (ibid. p. 78 ff.).

Fol. 3 a the miracles of Christ, to whom be glory! The patriarch's journey was begun on Saturday the 15th of Hatâr¹, in the year 888 of the Martyrs, which is equivalent to the 23rd of Rabi' the First of the year 568 (A.D. 1172). It is said that he founded a monastery outside Jerusalem, containing a church, and named after Sharkis, who is the same as Abu Sirjah; and to this church he brought all the altar-vessels and golden dinars that he had in his charge; and it is said that this Armenian monastery contained twenty monks. The patriarch appointed a priest at Cairo to act as his deputy, together with the son of the priest, for the purpose of reciting prayers, and performing liturgies at the proper time, in the church of John the Baptist, which stands over the chapel of the Pure Lady in the Hârah Zawilah, as it has already been related; and at this church there assembled a congregation of Armenians, both men and women. As for the monastery which belongs to this people, together with its churches, it was deserted, and its door was fastened up.

§ The news came that the patriarch had arrived at Jerusalem in safety, and that all the Christians had gone out to meet him with joy
Fol. 3 b and gladness, chanting psalms, and carrying before him crosses and lighted tapers, and censers with incense².

§ After this, the patriarch lived for a time in happiness, and then went to his rest in the mercy of God, to whom be praise, on the 5th of Tûbah¹, in the year last mentioned ; and he was buried in the monastery of James the son of Zebedee at Jerusalem. He was noble in character and beautiful in form ; he was of perfect stature ; his face was encircled by his beard and whiskers, which were growing grey ; and his age was nearly eighty years.

§ It is said that the Armenian bishop² resident in Jerusalem, when he saw how men sought the society of this holy patriarch on account of his noble qualities, was filled with envy of him, and gave him poison to drink, which caused his death. But God did not show favour to this bishop after the patriarch's death, or grant him a happy life ; for he died only twenty days afterwards. God knows best in his hidden wisdom whether that which was told of the bishop was true. This patriarch of whom we have been speaking was a learned priest, understanding the divine books and able to expound them. But there were those who envied him on account of his good reputation among men ; and so they said that he was guilty of immoral conduct. This report arose among those who were most envious of his innocence. The author of this book declared as follows : I met Abû 'l-Kâsim Khalîl, the physician and philosopher of Ascalon, who said that he had visited this patriarch one

Fol. 4 b The report was not spread until after he had departed to Syria and had died there. It was at the house of Al-A'azz Ḥasan ibn Salāmah called Al-Bākilānī, who was chief cadi² at Misr, that I the poor author of this book met Abū 'l-Kāsim, on Monday, the 27th of Shawwāl, in the year 568 (A.D. 1173).

Fate of the Armenian Churches of Al-Basātīn and Az-Zuhri.

§ Since no Armenian of authority was now left in Egypt, the Copts acquired possession of this large and ancient church³ by a decree of our Lord the Sultan, through the intercession of the Shaikh ar-Rā'is Ṣafī ad-Daulah ibn Abū 'l-Ma'āli, known as Ibn Sharāfī, his scribe. Then its fittings were renewed by the emir Sa'id ad-Daulah Bahrām the steward of the Armenians. When the Shaikh Ṣafī ad-Daulah had fully provided all that was needed for the construction of the church, through Fol. 5 a the priest Abū 'l-Wafa ibn Abī 'l-Bashar, the patriarch Anba Mark⁴, who was the seventy-third in the succession, came with Anba John, bishop of Tamwaih¹, and Anba Michael, bishop of Bastah², and a body of priests and chief men and orthodox laity; and the church was consecrated on Wednesday, the 17th of Ba'ûnah³, in the year 892 of the Blameless Martyrs; and the liturgy was celebrated and the people communicated at the hand of the patriarch. This church became a patriarchal church, and the liturgy was conducted henceforth by the priests of the church of the Lady in the Hârat ar-Rûm⁴ in Cairo. Abû Sa'id ibn az-Zayyât provided for the painting of the apse⁵ of this church,

² The cadi of cadis (قاضي القضايا) or chief judge was the principal legal officer under the Fatimide caliphs and their successors. This high dignitary was distinguished by riding on a grey mule, and he held his court in great state on Tuesday and Saturday at the Mosque of 'Amr. See Al-Makrīzī, Khiṭāt, i. p. ۲۰۷ f.; As-Suyūṭī, Husn al-Muḥādarah fī Akhbār Miṣr wa 'i-Kāhirah, ii. p. ۱۰۰. Al-A'azz became chief cadi in A.H. 549.

The word 'Rûm' was used very loosely by the Arabs, sometimes in the sense of Europeans generally, sometimes in that of subjects of the Byzantine empire.

The apse is an almost indispensable feature in the architecture of a Coptic church, and is usually highly decorated. Marble seats in tiers, forming a tribune or synthronus, run round the foot of the wall, while above the tribune the wall is cased with marble panelling for some little height; and over this stand the painted figures of Our Lord and the Twelve Apostles. It is probably to such frescoes that Abû Shâlih is alluding. See Butler, Coptic Churches, i. pp. 40, 112, &c. (A. J. B.)

§ There came a bishop from Armenia, accompanied by three priests, and sent by the king¹ of Armenia and the patriarch. He brought a despatch from both of them and two letters, one of which was from Al-Malik Salāḥ ad-Dīn², and the other from Al-Malik Saif ad-Dīn Abū Bakr³, his brother, to Al-Malik Taḳī ad-Dīn⁴, and they recommended in their letters that the bishop should be received with honour, and that the two churches of the Armenians in Az-Zuhrī⁵ and Al-Bustān⁶ should be given up to him. So this bishop alighted at the church of John the

³ Abū Bakr Muhammad ibn Abī 'sh-Shukr Ayyūb ibn Shāfi'i ibn Marwān, surnamed Al-Malik al-'Ādil Saif ad-Dīn, brother of Saladin, was born A.H. 530=A.D. 1145 and died A.H. 615=A.D. 1218. He acted as Saladin's viceroy for Egypt from A.H. 578 to 579, but was now ruling Aleppo, handed over to him by his brother. In A.H. 596=A.D. 1200 he became sultan of Egypt. See Ibn Khallikān, *Biogr. Taḳī ad-Dīn was recalled to Syria towards the end of A.H. 582=A.D. 1186, so that it must have been in this year that the envoys mentioned in the text arrived from Armenia. See Ibn Khallikān, *Biogr. § On the Sunday of Olives³, the first day of the eighth week of the Holy Fast, and the 1st of Barmūdah⁴, in the year 892 (A. D. 1177) of the Blameless Martyrs, a body of priests came to this church, with the laity, among whom were Abū Sa'īd ibn Abū 'l-Fadl ibn Fahd and Abū 'l-Yaman ibn Abū 'l-Faraj ibn Abī 'l-Yaman ibn Zanbūr ; and these two had with them a vessel containing pure oil with which they ate their peas ; and they placed it within the church, but afterwards when they looked for it, they could not find it. Then they suspected the Muslim guardians of the church, and allowed their servants to beat them ; so the guardians went to the Fakīh Bahā ad-Dīn⁵ 'Alī the Damascene in a fury, on account of what had happened to them, and said to him : 'Shall the Muslims be struck in the face by Christians in the month of Ramaḍān ?' Then the fakīh at once informed the sultan of this occurrence, and it greatly angered him ; so he sent for Ṣaṣī ad-Daulah Abū 'l-Ma'ālī ibn Sharāfi, his scribe, and blamed him for it, and demanded of him the decree which he had received, empowering Fol. 6 a the Copts to take possession of this church ; and this, by ill luck, was in the sleeve of his garment. So he brought it out and handed it to the sultan, who commanded that the door of the church should be barred, and this order was obeyed at once ; and the door of the church was barred. After a short time, however, the sultan commanded by a new decree that the church should be restored to the Copts, and its door should be opened to them, and they should pray in it, and that none should molest them in any way without cause. After this the condition of this church remained prosperous, and one of the priests of the church

After this there came to the court from Tûs¹ an Imâmite Fakîh, to whom Al-Bustân, of which we have spoken, was allotted as a fief, after the death of Al-Fakîh Ali of Damascus, in whose hands it had been. The new-comer began to oppress the Christians, and required gifts from them in the form of bribes, so far as his power extended. Then he shut the two churches², after pillaging the Great Church, the door of which he barred with a plank until Friday the 13th of Sha'bân; A. H. 581 (A. D. 1185). There came an Armenian, who said that he was a friend of Tâj ad-Daulah Bahrâm³ the Armenian, who had been vizier to Al-Imâm Hâfiż; and he said that he had buried money, belonging to Tâj ad-Daulah the said vizier, Fol. 6 b in the Great Church⁴, and that he had arrived in order to bring it to light; but no heed was given to him. It is said that he went on in his imaginings until the church was opened to him, and he dug in certain places. Then he said: 'The money has vanished from this place; those who pillaged the church have taken it.' Thus he complained that a wrong had been done. The church remained open for him, and he lived in it as long as the fancy held him; only he placed a second seal upon it on the part of Al-Malik al-Mużaffar⁵; but nothing was restored there.

Now the time during which they had been closed was one year and fifteen days. So the Copts celebrated the liturgy in the Great Church on the first day of the blessed month of Kuhīak³ in the year 903⁴ of the Blameless Martyrs; and after this the Copts forbade the Armenians to make use of the Great Church. Then an assembly of the chief men took counsel on this matter; and both the churches were restored to the possession of the Armenians.

It was not until A.H. 596=A.D. 1200 that Al-Malik al-Ādil became actual ruler of Egypt for the second time, succeeding his great-nephew Al-Malik al-Manṣūr, son of Al-Malik al-Azīz, as sultan. Perhaps İşabl al-Fil was another name for Dār al-Fil, which may have been turned into stables like other palaces at Cairo; the Mamlūk sultans had stables on the Birkat al-Fil. After A.H. 600 the borders of the Birkat al-Fîl were much built upon and surrounded by lofty manzarahs; and this became the finest quarter of Cairo. During the high Nile, when the pool was full, the sultan used to be rowed about it at night, while the manzarahs were illuminated. Ibn Sa'îd says :

Its site has been used for the erection of a mosque, which was built by Husain the Kurd, the son-in-law of Ṣalâḥ ibn Ruzzîk², the vizier in the caliphate of Al-Imâm Al-Ādîd li-dîni 'llâh³.

انظر الى بركة الفيل التي اكتفت ◆ بها المناظر كالاهداب للبصر
كأنما هي والابصار ترميها ◆ كواكب قد اداروها على القمر

'See the Elephant's Pool, encircled by manzarahs, like lashes around the eye;
It seems, when the eyes behold it, as if stars had been set around the moon.'

See Al-Makrizî, op. cit. ii. p. 111, cf. p. 118; Ibn Dukmâk, op. cit. iv. p. 11 and v. p. 40.

¹ The copyist has probably omitted the words 'والفيل' 'and of the elephant' after 'بركتى قارون' 'the two pools of Kârûn.' There was but a single Birkah Kârûn, which was, however, only separated by a dyke from the Birkat al-Fîl. The passage should therefore doubtless read 'the two pools of Kârûn and of Al-Fîl.' When the quarters of Al-'Askar and Al-Katâ'i were founded (see Introduction), the borders of the Birkah Kârûn were thickly inhabited, but were afterwards partly deserted. See Al-Makrizî, op. cit. ii. p. 111.

Revenues of the Coptic Church.

§ The sum of the revenues of the churches and monasteries in the two regions of the North and South, according to the estimate made of them for the year 575 (A.D. 1180), was 2,923 dinars in ready money, and 4,826 ardabs¹ of corn in produce; while the landed property amounted to 915 feddâns. This property came into the hands of the Christians through gifts from the Fatimide caliphs down to the lunar and revenue year 569 (A.D. 1174); but it was taken away from them and given to the Muslims, so that no part of it was left in the possession of the Christians; this was under the dynasty of the Ghuzz and Kurds at the end of the caliphate of Al-Mustadî' bi-amri 'llâh², and under the administration of Salâh ad-Dîn Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb the Kurd.

The Southern Region : 467 dinars, and the amount of produce which has been stated, and 906 feddâns. The Northern Region : 2,445 dinars and nine feddâns.

At other times it was one of the most charming resorts near Cairo, being of extreme fertility, and producing flax and other crops. Beside it were gardens also called Al-Habash or Ard Habash. 'O Lake of Al-Habash, at which I spent a day of unbroken pleasure and happiness, so that thy whole surface seemed to me like Paradise, and all the time I seemed to be keeping festival. How charming is the young flax upon thee, with its knots of flowers or buds, and when its leaves like swords are unsheathed from thee, and the leeks have extended their canopy over thee. It seemed as if the towers upon thee were brides unveiling, while birds warbled round them. Would that I knew whether thy season would return, for my desires begin with it and return to it!' ¹ Most of these names will be well known to the reader, but a few of them may be commented on. Al-Murtâhiyah is now part of Ad-Dâkahliyah. Al-Abwâniyah was a small province near Damietta, named from the town of Abwân, the inhabitants of which were chiefly Christians; in the fourteenth century it had become part of Al-Buhairah. See Ibn Dukmâk, v. p. v.; Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. 11. Jazîrah Kûsanîya lay between Cairo and Alexandria, ibid. iv. p. 1... An-Nastarâwiyah lay between Damietta and Alexandria, and was named from its capital Nastarû, ibid. iv. p. v... Al-Jadîdah is reckoned by Yâkût in the province of Murtâhiyah; but Al-Idrisî names Al-Jadîdîyah as a separate district [p. 121] (ed. Rome). Hauf Ramsîs was between Cairo and Alexandria; see Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. vii. Our copyist omits some names and figures.

The nomenclature and the boundaries of the Egyptian provinces have fluctuated much under Muslim rule. Al-Kudâ'i, who wrote at the end of the eleventh century, divides Lower Egypt into thirty-three provinces (جوار) and Upper Egypt into twenty; see his list quoted by Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iv. p. 581.

The official list of places in Egypt drawn up for the purpose of estimating the revenue in A.H. 777=A.D. 1375 gives the following names of provinces:—Lower Egypt: district of Cairo, Al-Kalyûbiyah, Ash-Sharkîyah, Ad-Dâkahliyah, district of Damietta, Al-Gharbîyah, Al-Manûfiyah, Abyar and Jazîrah Banî Naṣr, Al-Buhairah, Fûwah and Al-Muzâhamîyatain, An-Nastarâwiyah, district of

This revenue was drawn in the caliphate of Al-Mustansîr¹ and in the days of Al-Kâhhâl² the cadi.

§ Afterwards, in the time of Al-Afðal³ his son, in the caliphate of Al-Âmir, one dinar and a third was imposed as a poll-tax.

§ In the vizierate of Ruðwân ibn Walakhshî⁴, in the caliphate of Al-Hâfið, [this tax was raised to] two dinars.

Alexandria, Al-Jîzîyah; and Upper Egypt: Al-Itfîhiyah, Al-Fayyûm, Al-Bahna-sâ'îyah, Al-Ushmûnain, Al-Usyûtîyah, Al-Ikhmîniyah, Al-Kûsîyah.

The present principal divisions of Egypt, with the number of inhabited centres, are:—Cairo (1), Alexandria (56), Damietta (5), Rosetta (9), Port Said (28), Suez (8), Al-'Arîsh (6), Kûsair (2), Al-Buhairah (1,882), Ash-Sharkîyah (1,868), Ad-Dakahlîyah (1,147), Al-Gharbîyah (1,817), Al-Kalyâbîyah (717), Al-Manûsiyah (603), Al-Asyûtîyah (436), Banî Suwaif (423), Al-Fayyûm (567), Al-Jîzîyah (369), Minyah (734), Isnâ (627), Jirjah (870), Kanâ (898). See Recensement de l'Égypte, ii. pp. x and xi.

² This refers to Ibn al-Kâhhâl, the Kâdî 'l-Kudât or chief cadi in the last years of Al-Mustansîr's reign. It was, however, Badr al-Jamâli, the Armenian slave, who became vizier to Al-Mustansîr in A.H. 467=A.D. 1075, who was the father of Al-Afðal Shâhanshâh mentioned in the next paragraph.

³ After the death of Badr in A.H. 487=A.D. 1094, the soldiery chose his son Al-Afðal Shâhanshâh as his successor in the vizierate. When Al-Mustansîr died in the same year, Al-Afðal remained in his post, and continued to act as vizier during the reign of Al-Musta'lî, and after the accession of Al-Âmir (in A.H. 495=A.D. 1101), who eventually caused him to be put to death in A.H. 519=A.D. 1125. Treasures of immense value were found in his house. See Al-Makrîzî, op. cit. i. p. 201; Ibn Khallikân, op. cit. i. p. 612; Ibn Khaldûn, iv. p. 11 f.

⁴ Successor in the vizierate of Tâj ad-Daulah Bahrâm, the Armenian, whom he deposed from his office by force in A.H. 531. Ruðwân was an oppressor of the Christians. In A.H. 533, on account of intrigues against him, Ruðwân fled to Syria and returned with an army, but being attacked by the troops of the caliph, he fled to Upper Egypt, where he was captured. He was imprisoned at Cairo, but escaped in A.H. 442, and made a fresh attempt to seize the power of which he-

Account of Mark ibn al-Kanbar.

§ In the northern region, Mark ad-Darîr (the Blind) ibn Mauhûb, called Ibn al-Kanbar¹, was made priest by the bishop of Damietta², and he celebrated the liturgy and communicated the Holy Mysteries to the people. Then the report of him reached the Father and Patriarch Anba John³, the seventy-second in the order of succession, who condemned him, and suspended him and excommunicated him. After that, Ibn al-Kanbar set his mind to the composition of commentaries on the books of the church and others, according to the inventions of his own mind together with the learning that he possessed. Next he taught the people that a man who does not confess his sins to a confessor, and perform penance for his sins, cannot lawfully receive the Eucharist, and that if such a man dies without confession to the priest, he dies in his sins and goes to hell; and accordingly the people began to confess to Ibn al-Kanbar and neglected the practice of had been deprived, but he was resisted and slain. See Al-Makrîzî, op. cit. i. p. 109; As-Suyûfî, op. cit. ii. p. 100; Ibn Khaldûn, iv. p. 49; Ibn Khallikân, op. cit. ii. p. 179.

² Probably a mistake for Damsîs; see below, fol. 14 a. The Coptic bishop of Damietta had the rank of metropolitan.

confession over the censer¹; and they all inclined to him, and listened to his words. A number of the Samaritans also assembled to meet him, and he disputed with them, and showed them that he who came into the world was the Messiah who was expected; and he converted many of them. He also allowed the people to let their hair grow long² Fol. 9 b

² The objection was to the practice then general in Egypt, as it still is among the conservative classes in that country, to shave off either all the hair of the

as the Melkites do; and he forbade circumcision¹, saying that circumcision belongs to the Jews and Hanifs², and that it is not lawful for Christians to resemble the Jews or the Hanifs in any of their traditions which are in force among them in our time. For this doctrine he set up many proofs. He forbade the practice of burning sandarach³ in the churches, and allowed only frankincense⁴; because this was offered to the Lord with the gold and the myrrh, and therefore head, or all with the exception of a small tuft at the crown. We are told, however (below on fol. 15 a), that Ibn al-Kanbar approved of a circular tonsure. Whether this latter notice refers to the clergy does not appear, but it seems that Ibn al-Kusṭāl, whose views on the shaving of the head seem to have resembled those of Ibn al-Kanbar, particularly objected to the shaving of the whole head in the case of the priests; see fol. 20 a.

² He uses the word 'Hanifs' instead of 'Muslims,' because the latter claimed that in practising circumcision they were following the tradition not only of the Jews, but of the ancient, orthodox religion to which Abraham belonged, and to which the Jews had added. It was this ancient religion which Mahomet professed to restore. The passages of the Koran are well known:

نَّمَّ أَوْحَيْنَا لِلَّيْكَ أَنِ اتَّبِعْ مِلَّةَ إِبْرَاهِيمَ حَنِيفًا وَمَا كَانَ مِنَ الْمُشْرِكِينَ

(Sūrat an-Nahl, v. 124; cf. v. 121, Sūrat al-Fajr, v. 162, and Sūrat Al-'Imrān, v. 89). 'Then we taught thee by inspiration to follow the religion of Abraham, who was a Hanff; he was not of the polytheists.'

it is not right that anything else should be burnt in the church. He said to those that confessed to him: 'I will bear part of your sins for you, and part will be forgiven by God through your doing penance; for he who receives a penance for his sin in this world will not be compelled by God to do a second penance in the next world.' His followers who confessed to him called him 'Our Father the Director' (or 'Teacher'). When he stopped in the churches a large assembly came together to meet him, and he raised many dissensions, such as had not been known in the church.

After a time the bishops in the North [of Egypt] were informed of these matters, and laid information of them before the Father and Patriarch Anba Mark¹, the seventy-third in the order of succession, who reprimanded him on account of them, and wrote letters to him in which he warned him and forbade him and exhorted him with exhortations of consolation, but he would not listen to him or return to him. Necessity therefore compelled the patriarch to send to summon him to his presence, so Ibn al-Kanbar went up to him to the Cell² at the church of Al-Mu'allakah³ in Miṣr. There the patriarch assembled to Fol. 10 a meet him a synod consisting of bishops and priests and chief men⁴, and said to him: 'Know that he who breaks any of the commandments of the church, and bids the people act in contradiction to it, lies under the penalties of the law. Why then dost thou not return from thy ways?' Many things took place with regard to him, the end of which was that he was ordered to go under guard with deputies of the patriarch to the monastery of Anba Antūnah¹ near Itfīḥ; this was in the month of Amshīr in the year 890 of the Blameless Martyrs; moreover [it was ordered] that he and his brethren should shave the hair of their heads. Ibn al-Kanbar soon began to suffer from the circumstances in which he was placed; and so he addressed the patriarch, and entered into communication with him by means of his mother and his brethren and his uncle, who did not cease to kiss the patriarch's hands and feet, and by means of the prayers of the chief men; and at last the patriarch granted their prayers and wrote to the superior of the monastery bidding him lead that Mark to the place in which the body of Saint Anthony lay, and require him to swear upon it and upon the Gospel of John that he would not again do any of the things that he had done, and then allow him to go free. So the superior did this and released Mark, who returned to his own country² on those conditions.

¶ The said Mark [ibn al-Kanbar] went from the monastery of Fol. 10 b Saint Anthony to the Rīf³, after having been made to swear upon the holy Gospel and upon the said body of our Father Anthony, and after having been made to promise that he would not return to his former ways or transgress the canons of the church and the rules of the law; yet this said Mark, when he arrived in his own country, returned to his former ways and did even worse than before. For there gathered together to him a very large body of the ignorant from the river-banks and the villages and the towns, nearly five thousand men; and reports of him arrived as far as Kalyûb¹. Among these men were some who obeyed him and attached themselves to him, and bound themselves to do what he appointed and ordered for each of them; so that some of them bound themselves to bring him part of their money and of the fruit of their gardens and vineyards, and a tithe of their income; and they brought it to him, so that he increased in wealth beyond his former state.

³ There has been some dispute as to the meaning of the Arabic word ريف, which generally means the country lying upon the banks of a river, or upon the sea-shore; see Dozy, ad verb. In Egypt the word was used to denote the Delta or Lower Egypt; see below, fol. 21 a. M. Amélineau, in his somewhat curious article upon the name الريف, speaks as if it were known from two sources only: the Arabic Synaxarium, the authority of which he rejects, and the Ethiopic Chronicle of John of Niciu, upon the authority of which he peremptorily decides that the Rīf is synonymous with Upper Egypt! see Géogr. p. 403 f.

Then the patriarch wrote to him to make known to him what would happen to him if he did not repent, and to terrify him and warn him of that which would befall him if he went on in his pride, and in his breaking of his oath and departure from that which he had sworn; and the patriarch exhorted him and warned him of the end of his perjury and his heresy and his excommunication, namely, that the end of these things is perdition. Mark ibn al-Kanbar would not, however, listen to the patriarch's letters, but behaved insolently and increased in pride and perversity, and would not be converted. So the patriarch wrote letters to the bishops of Northern Egypt containing an account of the case from the beginning to the end, and a summary of the canons by which such a man is condemned to excommunication on the severest terms if he persists in his pride and cleaves to the error of his impiety; and bidding each of the bishops, after giving an account of whatever he had ascertained of the man, write in his own handwriting to the effect that it was not lawful for Mark to do as he had dared to do. So each of the bishops wrote his own account of Mark's opposition to the law of his own church, and added that it was not right for him to do what he had dared to do, and that he could not be allowed to follow the fancies of his own mind as he had done in transgression of the law ; and each bishop confirmed the sentence of excommunication upon him.

After this, Mark ibn al-Kanbar was not satisfied with what he had done, and with having broken the oath which he had sworn upon the Gospel and upon the body of the great Saint Anthony in the church of God, or with having resisted the law, and refused to accept that which was binding upon him according to the law of the Christians of whom he was one ; but he even wrote an address and submitted it to the sultan. The purport of his address was that he desired that an assembly should be called to meet him in the presence of the patriarch ; but he embellished his account of what had passed, and said whatever it pleased him to say, and asked for protection.

The Kâdî 'l-Fâdil ibn 'Alî al-Baisân¹ wrote an answer to his letter, of which the following is a copy :

'Thou art a man of great distinction. But the patriarch of the Christians has made up a story of a man who is innocent of having departed from the truth of his religion and says that he has departed from it, and has brought in a strange doctrine, by which the word of his people is cut short, and the traditions generally held by his co-religionists are broken.

Fol. 11 b 'Thou hast been banished once, and hast ventured to return from banishment without permission. Go forth, therefore, as a private person without rank or jurisdiction, and do not assume any pre-eminence over the Christians or jurisdiction among them, until a lawful assembly be called to meet thee which shall decide whether thou shalt be of them, in which case thou shalt not oppose them, or whether thou shalt depart from them, in which case thou wilt wander away from the faithful and followers of the book, and it will be necessary for thee to become a Muslim, for thou wilt be neither Jew nor Christian.' This is the end.

§ After Mark ibn al-Kanbar had remained in his own district persisting in his former ways, then he appeared at the Cell at the church of Al-Mu'allakah in Miṣr, and waited upon the patriarch, and confessed his sin, and asked for pardon, which was granted to him. Prayers were offered, and the liturgy was said : and when Mark went forward to communicate of the holy mysteries, the patriarch made him swear, in the presence of a body of bishops and priests, that he would not again do what he had been forbidden to do. So he swore a binding oath, and made firm promises, before receiving the holy mysteries. Then he returned to his own district, and had not spent a single day there before he returned to his former ways ; nor did he keep his second oath, taken before the altar of God in the presence of the bishops and priests and chief men and deacons and a congregation of the orthodox laity. Thus it became evident that he did not fear God or respect men, since he had been allowed to receive the eucharist in the sanctuary of God. He now gave permission to those who followed his opinions to communicate early¹ on the festival of the Forty Martyrs², which is on the 13th of Barmahât, and takes place during the fast of the Holy Forty Days ; and on this day he forbade communion of the wine³. He forbade also

² The 13th of Barmahât would be equivalent to the 9th of March, whereas the Roman calendar keeps the festival of the Forty Martyrs of Sebaste on the 10th of March.

the giving of extreme unction by relations to one another¹. These things were in addition to the other matters which were known of him before. Then he began to ride about, accompanied by a body of his followers; and he travelled through the Rif in state like a wâlî, and banquets were prepared for him and his companions. The end of this was that he went over to the sect of the Melkites, and confessed the Two Natures and the Two Wills²; and the Melkites received him. Thus he threw off the faith of Severus and Dioscorus³, our fathers the

² Our author, though an Armenian, if the title of the MS. be correct, here speaks as if he fully accepted the creed of the Coptic monophysites. To explain this we must remember that many of the Armenians were monophysites and monotheletes as well as the Copts, and that when the Armenian catholicus, Gregory II, in the course of his travels, arrived in Egypt about A.D. 1080, the representatives of these two religious communities made a confession of common faith in the One Nature of Christ. 'On that day,' says Michael, bishop of Tinnîs, 'it was made known to all that Copts, Armenians, Syrians, Ethiopians, and Nubians are at one in the orthodox faith which the holy fathers of old once unanimously confessed, and which Nestorius, Leo, and the Council of Chalcedon had changed.' See Renaudot, Hist. Patr. p. 461; Ter-Mikelian, Die armen. Kirche, &c. p. 84.

On the other hand, it is certain that many of the Armenians, and of their writers and teachers, preserved the catholic belief which Ibn al-Kanbar and his followers also maintained; and, in the lifetime of our author himself, the Synod of Tarsus, summoned by king Leo and the patriarch Gregory in A.D. 1196, acknowledged the Council of Chalcedon. For the acceptance of the catholic doctrine by Armenian doctors, see Clemens Galanus, Conciliat. Eccles. Arm. cum Romana ex ipsis Armenorum Patrum et doctorum testimoniis, &c., Rome, 1690.

³ It is, of course, well known that the Copts look upon Dioscorus, the twenty-fifth patriarch of Alexandria, who was condemned by the Council of Chalcedon in A.D. 451, and upon Severus, the fifty-seventh patriarch of Antioch, who was condemned by the Synods of Constantinople of A.D. 518 and A.D. 536 and the second General Council of Constantinople in A.D. 553, as the two great champions

patriarchs, who withheld emperors and great men in matters of religion, and exposed the following of the emperor¹ in his creed, and would not give up the faith of the 318 ancient fathers², who had withheld Diocletian³ the Infidel, and endured torments of different kinds, the limbs of some being cut off, in defence of the true faith established by patriarchs and bishops through the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and condemned and excommunicated any who should depart from it and believe differently. Now this wretch Mark ibn al-Kanbar, blind both in eyes and heart, as one of the fathers said, separated himself from the ranks of the brethren, as Judas Iscariot did, and therefore God removed him from the ranks of the orthodox, as he removed Satan from the ranks of the angels on high on account of his pride and his thinking within himself that he was the greatest, for which cause he fell; and so this wretch Mark thought within himself that he was wise, and therefore he fell and became one of the disputatious heretics who imagine that the Will of the Manhood was opposed to the Will of the Godhead; and of the monophysite doctrine, or orthodox faith as they call it. These two monophysite saints are commemorated or invoked more than once in the course of the Coptic liturgy. The Prayer of Absolution addressed to the Son (عَلِيل الابن) prays that all present may be absolved 'out of the mouth of' the Trinity, of the twelve apostles, of Saint Mark, and of 'the holy patriarch Severus and our teacher Dioscorus.' The visit of Severus to Egypt is commemorated in the Coptic calendar on Bâbah 2=September 29, his death on Amshîr 14=February 8; and the translation of his body to the monastery of To Ennatôn at Alexandria on Kîhak 10=December 6. Severus was the author of many works in Greek, which were translated into Syriac, and are still in great part extant; see British Museum Catalogue of Syriac MSS. The fragments of Severus' works in the original Greek still existing are to be found in Mai, Script. vet. nova collectio. The death of Dioscorus is commemorated on Tût 7=September 4.

he was excommunicated by three patriarchs: namely, by Anba Jonas¹ the seventy-second, who died while this wretch was still bound by his anathemas, and had not been loosed from them; by the patriarch of Antioch, Anba Michael²; and by Anba Mark the seventy-third [patriarch of Alexandria]; and also by sixty bishops in the two provinces of Northern and Southern Egypt.

§ Now this Ibn al-Kanbar had gathered together a body from among the Melkites, the opponents of our orthodox faith, together with those who came to him of the ignorant and simple among the Copts, and he went down to Kalyub with the desire to pervert some of the inhabitants of that town; but the scribe of the town, and the dâmin³

² This patriarch does not seem to be named in the lists. He was the author of a treatise on Preparation for the Eucharist (Renaudot, Hist. Patr. p. 550). There are five of the name in the rolls of the see, namely, Michael I, the 88th patriarch, consecrated A.D. 879; Michael II, the 126th, A.D. 1370; Michael III, the 129th, A.D. 1401; Michael IV, the 134th, A.D. 1454; Michael V, the 140th, A.D. 1555. The published lists are full of discrepancies. See Le Quien, Oriens Christ. ii. col. 713 ff.; Neale, Patriarchate of Antioch, p. 173 ff. If Michael of Antioch excommunicated Ibn al-Kanbar, it must have been on account of his rejection of the monophysite doctrine, not on account of his teaching on the sacrament of penance, which agrees with that of the patriarch of Antioch, contained in his treatise; see Renaudot, op. cit. p. 552.

✓ ³ The dâmin was the farmer of the taxes. The fact that he and the scribe were both Copts is an illustration of the rule followed by the Mahometan governors of employing Copts as officials in those branches of the government service which required facility in writing and accuracy in calculation; see below, fol. 28 b. There is a well-known passage of Al-Makrizî which contains the following words, in which he speaks of the unsuccessful rebellion of the Copts in A.H. 216=A.D. 831:

فرجعوا من المحاربة الى المكايضة واستعمال المكر وللحللة ومكايضة للمسلمين وعملوا كتاب لخارج فكانوا لهم ول المسلمين اخبار كثيرة

of the town, and others of the orthodox party heard of him, and went to him and watched him, and took him and his party and bound them to pay the poll-tax¹, and gave them orders, and informed the wâli² of the town that this body of men were acting in opposition to their own laws, and lay under the ban of the patriarch, and that the people of every district in which they settled would suffer from them. 'Visit them Fol. 13 a therefore' [added the scribe and the dâmin] 'and do not let them go until thou hast obtained money from them, lest they secretly enter the town and harm come to the inhabitants.' So the wâli visited them and made prisoners of them, and would not let them go until they had paid seventeen dinars as a contribution towards the poll-tax; and when they had paid the poll-tax, certificates were written for them in which they bound themselves not to visit Kalyûb, except as travellers on their way to the capital or some other city, and never to settle in the town. Thus they departed from Kalyûb in the worst of plights.

Then Ibn al-Kanbar heard that the patriarch³ of the Melkites was arrived from Alexandria, and was spending his time in a hall of reception⁴; so he made his way thither to salute him and to congratulate

'None of the Copts after this was able to rebel against the government; and the Muslims subdued them throughout the country villages. So they betook themselves to cheating instead of fighting, and to the employment of cunning and guile, and to cheating the Muslims; and they were appointed scribes of the land-tax, and there were many affairs between them and the Muslims.' (Khitat, ii. p. ۲۹۰.)

² The wâli l-beled or governor of the town was the chief local official, and head of the police.

³ Sophronius II was patriarch in A.D. 1166. His successor was Elias (?). In 1195 Mark was patriarch. Le Quien, ii. col. 487 ff.

him upon his good health, in the company of a body of followers who might justify their leader's words if he were attacked. Now this patriarch was accompanied by several metropolitans, that is, the metropolitans of the country, who informed the patriarch of the harm that Ibn al-Kanbar had done to them by breaking the canons of their religion, and they inquired into the matter, and they said, 'This man is a Copt, and does what is not customary.' Then Ibn al-Kanbar answered, 'God curse the hour when I became one of you.' And the patriarch said to him, 'Virtue and peace alone are to be found in our company.'

Subsequently to this, Ibn al-Kanbar requested that a church might be allotted to him at Sanbâṭ¹, after what had happened to him there. But the metropolitan of that place said to the patriarch, 'Relieve me of my office of metropolitan, and call him to take a church for himself, if thou hast appointed one for him.' So the patriarch was silent, and said

Fol. 13 b not a word. A disgraceful encounter took place between Ibn al-Kanbar and this metropolitan of Sanbâṭ, the end of which was that the metropolitan rushed upon him and dealt him a painful blow, and knocked off his head-covering before a full assembly. This happened in the month of Abîb in the year of the Church 901 (=A.D. 1186).

In the same month this wretch Ibn al-Kanbar dared to return and pay a visit to the father and patriarch Anba Mark, accompanied by Ibn 'Abdûn and one of the most distinguished friends of the patriarch, to whose Cell at the Mu'allakah they conducted him. The patriarch was sit. The lower part of the room, much narrower than the Liwân, is called مَقْصُوْدٌ, and here the guests leave their shoes before stepping on the Liwân. Upon the Liwân, mats or carpets are spread, and against the walls are mattresses and cushions composing the dîwân or divan. See Lane, Modern Egyptians, i. p. 15 f.

¹ Also called Sunbûtiyah (Yâkût); situated in the Jazîrah Kûsanîya, as the district was then called. It was the Coptic ΤΑΣΕΙΛΠΟΤ, and is now included in the district of Ziftah, in the province of Al-Gharbîyah, having a population in 1885 of 3,223. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch iv. p. 101; Al-Idrîsî, op. cit. (ed. Rome) [p. 116]; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 415.

surrounded by a company, and said to him, 'Why has thy reverence¹ returned to me, thou excommunicate, in this guise so different from our fashion?' and he put forth his hand to Ibn al-Kanbar's head and struck off his cap, so that he remained bareheaded. But one of the disciples of the patriarch restored the cap to his head; and this vexed the patriarch, and he was wroth with that disciple for what he had done without permission. So Ibn al-Kanbar departed from his presence, and went forth ashamed, not knowing how to walk. Then the news of this occurrence reached the patriarch of the Melkites, who sent for Ibn al-Kanbar, and reproved him, saying, 'Dost thou visit a patriarch whose faith thou dost oppose? How will he arrange thy affairs?' Then the patriarch of the Melkites sent Ibn al-Kanbar to the monastery of Al-Kuṣair², and there he dwelt with his companions, administering the affairs of the monastery; nor was he converted to anything except to disputing with all communities, thinking in himself that he was wise; yet while he thought thus he was overcome by ignorance. He lived only a short time after this, and then he died³, having destroyed his own soul and the souls of those whom he seduced by his deceit.

Fol. 14 a

§ After the death of Ibn al-Kanbar, I found a report on sheets of paper in the handwriting of Anba Michael⁴, metropolitan⁵ of Damietta, who therein makes the following statements to the author of this book, perhaps in answer to his letter to him on the subject of Ibn al-Kanbar and the evil which he wrought in the world. Within it were the words:

⁵ There were three metropolitans under the Coptic patriarch, namely those of Damietta, Jerusalem, and Abyssinia; but the date at which the see of Damietta was raised to the metropolitical dignity, and the exact nature of that dignity in this case, are uncertain.

'The poor miserable Michael at Damietta, hereby makes known to his friend the brother that which has reached me with regard to Fakhîr ibn al-Kanbar, who became a priest although unworthy of that dignity in many ways, and was called Mark, and with regard to his corrupt doctrines contained in the treatises which he composed, in books contradicting the truth, and by which he seduced simple men, devoid of understanding, into the paths of the heretics. Now this insolent heretic had married a wife, who lived with him for a time; but afterwards he desired to become a monk, and to separate himself from her. She, however, would not consent to his wishes; and so he conceived the plan of marrying her in secret to another. Then he went to Anba Jonas, bishop of Damsîs¹, and made him believe that his wife had become a nun, and was living in the convent with the nuns; and thus the bishop admitted him to the monastic vows, and ordained him priest. But his affairs did not long remain secret, and information was laid against him

Fol. 14 b before the patriarch Jonas, the seventy-second in the succession of the fathers and patriarchs; [and this occasioned]² his excommunication and cutting off, and the excommunication of the bishop who had ordained him priest, because he had not inquired into the truth of the matter in such a way as to establish the veracity of Ibn al-Kanbar before he admitted him as a monk and ordained him priest; for thus he had become a partner with him in his sin and his contempt of the apostolic canons. For Paul the Apostle says that if a woman chooses to separate herself from her husband, and he consents to her desire, she shall not marry another; and if she prefers to be married, she shall return to her former husband; but the man shall not put away his wife at all. Yet this man put away his wife, and forced her to separate herself from him, and married her to another.

'After this he made a parade of his learning and his exposition of the holy books, and he translated them from Coptic¹ into Arabic; and he wrote that Tafsîr at-Tafsîr according to the imaginations of his own mind. While he was living at the church of Damsîs, he concealed the Guide² which indicates what portions of the Gospels and of the ecclesiastic-

وَالْأَغْلَبُ عَلَى الْنَّصَارَى هَذِهِ الْأَدِيرَةُ مَعْرِفَةُ الْقِبْطِيِّ الْمَعِيدِيِّ وَهُوَ أَمْلُ الْلُّغَةِ الْقِبْطِيَّةِ وَعَدَمُهَا
الْلُّغَةُ الْقِبْطِيَّةُ الْسَّعْدِيَّةُ وَنَسَا نَصَارَى الْمَعِيدِيِّ وَالْأَدِيرَةِ لَا يَكَادُونَ يَتَكَلَّمُونَ إِلَّا بِالْقِبْطِيَّةِ الْمَعِيدِيَّةِ
(Khiṣāt, ii. p. ٥٠٧)

Of Udrunkah he says:

وَدَرَنَكَهُ اهْلُهَا مِنَ النَّصَارَى يَعْرُفُونَ الْلُّغَةَ الْقِبْطِيَّةَ فَيَتَحَدَّثُونَ صَغِيرُهُمْ وَكَبِيرُهُمْ بِهَا وَيَسْرُونَهَا
بِالْعَرَبِيَّةِ (Ibid. p. ٥١٨)

For a translation of these passages see Appendix.

² Generally called kutmârus, a corruption of the Coptic word ΚΑΤΔΙΕΡΟΣ, borrowed from the Greek and meaning 'divided into sections.' See Vansleb, Hist. de l'Église d'Alex. p. 62, and Butler, Coptic Churches, ii. p. 260. Mr. Malan has published an almost complete translation of a Coptic Kutmârus (London, D. Nutt, 1874). (A. 'The second part [contains the Lessons] for the following Sundays and Festivals:

'The Sundays of the Fast up to the Resurrection; the Sundays of the Fifty Days up to the Sunday of Pentecost; the Festival of the Ascension of the Lord; the Sundays of the months of Bashans, Ba'ūnah, Abīb, Misrī; the fifth of the five intercalary days; and every day of the Great Week.

Fol. 15 a the Tafṣīr at-Tafṣīr, to support his heresy and to strengthen his false creed, until he stole away the minds of some of the orthodox laity, whose fear of God and efforts for the salvation of their souls made them submit to be deceived by his embellishments, and to enter with him into his sect. First of all he allured them to confess their sins to him, and then he confirmed the belief in their minds that without such confession there can be no repentance or forgiveness. Next he commanded them not to shave the whole of their heads, but only the crown of the head, and to give up the practice of circumcision, because God created Adam perfect and free from defects¹; saying, "As God created the form of Adam and perfected it, so it is very good," and that this tradition of circumcision is not accepted except by the Jews and Hanifs. He also taught that frankincense alone should be burnt in the church, because it was offered to the Lord with the gold and the myrrh; and that a man must not wash his mouth with water after communion. All these things were taught by degrees, and the people listened to his teachings one by one during a space of more than fifteen years. At last he bade them make the sign of the cross with two fingers², and make their communion with the reserved³ sacrament which had been consecrated on the Sunday, and which the priest took with him and gave to those who confessed and desired to receive the communion after confessing and doing penance, taking the centre of it and dipping it in new wine, over which they prayed apart and so communicated.

Fol. 15 b He also abrogated the three days of the Fast of Nineveh⁴ and the first

³ Reservation of the sacrament is not sanctioned by the Coptic canons. See Butler, Coptic Churches, ii. pp. 54, 293. (A. J. B.)

week¹ of the Fast, according to the rule of the Melkites, and he allowed meat and milk to be eaten during the Week of Nineveh on the two days of Wednesday and Friday.

' In consequence of all these things, those of the orthodox who were on their guard against him awoke, while his followers among the Christians were deceived by him. Moreover, his creed which he expounded, and which is contained in the books which he wrote, is such as no Christian community accepts, not even the Melkites whom he approached in the doctrines that have already been described. For he said in his books that the Holy Trinity is composed of three Gods, each of them absolutely perfect in word and spirit, but having one common nature; and that they resemble Adam, Eve, and Abel, who were three persons with one common nature, each of them being as perfect as the others. In the next place, Mark drew distinctions between the three Persons, and held that the Father has dominion and authority over his Son and his Holy Spirit, and commands or forbids them to act; and that they obey him and follow his commands; and that each of the Three does a work in which the others do not participate: the Father, namely, commands; the Son creates what the Father commands him to create; and the Holy Spirit gives life to that to which the Father commands him to give life; and that every creature which exists was created by the Son, at the command of the Father; and everything that lives received life from the Holy Spirit at the command of the Father.

Lent. See Vansleb, Hist. de l'Église d'Alex. p. 76; Danhauer, Ecclesia Aethiopica (Strasburg, 1672), cap. vi. (A. J. B.)

Fol. 16 a ‘In the next place he held that there was a feminine quality in the Godhead, and he taught that this feminine quality is proper to the Holy Spirit¹. He held that the eternal Word of God is born through

‘Hebraei asserunt, nec de hac re apud eos ulla dubitatio est, Spiritum Sanctum lingua sua appellari genere feminino, id est נָשָׁךְ תֹּר . . . Sed et in evangelio quod, juxta Hebraeos scriptum, Nazarei lectitant, Dominus loquitur: modo me tulit mater mea, Spiritus Sanctus. Nemo autem in hac parte scandalizari debet quod dicatur apud Hebraeos spiritus genere feminino, cum nostra lingua appelletur genere masculino, et Graeco sermone neutro. In divinitate enim nullus est sexus. Et ideo in tribus principalibus linguis, quibus titulus dominicae scriptus est passionis, tribus generibus appellatur, ut sciamus nullius esse generis quod diversum est.’ (Jerome, Comm. in Esaiam, cap. xl. ver. 11.)

Origen quotes the same passage from the Ebionite or Nazarene ‘Gospel according to the Hebrews’:

“Ἐὰν δὲ προσίεται τις τὸ καθ' Ἐβραίους εὐαγγέλιον, ἐνθα αὐτὸς δὲ Σωτήρ φησιν Ἀρτὶ ἔλαβε με ἡ μῆτρα μου τὸ ἄγιον πνεῦμα ἐν μιᾷ τῶν τριχῶν μου καὶ ἀπήνεγκε με εἰς τὸ ὅρος τὸ μέγα Θαβώρ.” (Origen, Comm. in Johannem, tom. II; vol. iv. col. 132, Migne; cf. Homil. XV in Jerem.)

Ibn al-Kanbar, whose opinions are here described for us by a hostile witness, anxious to detect as many errors as he can in the writings of a man condemned by the authorities of the Coptic community, perhaps knew a little Syriac, or even a little Hebrew, and so was aware that the word for ‘spirit’ in those languages, نَسْكَنْ, نَسْكَنْ, is feminine in gender, and commented upon that fact, possibly to the same effect as Jerome. The Coptic metropolitan evidently presents us with a very crude statement of Ibn al-Kanbar’s views.

In Arabic حَرْبَرْ may be masculine as well as feminine, and is used in the former all eternity from the Father and the Holy Spirit; and he explained that as the Father has no beginning, so the Holy Spirit proceeds eternally from him¹, without beginning, and the Son also is begotten eternally from them both without beginning. He held that God never spoke to any of his creatures, but spoke to his Son and to his Holy Spirit; and he contradicted all the words of God that came to his people through the divine books, both old and new. He held that the patriarchs and the prophets were tormented in hell on account of their sins; and that they could not save their souls in spite of their piety towards God; but were punished in hell until the Lord Christ saved them, being himself without sin. He held that the patriarchs and prophets were without the gift of the Holy Spirit, and next that the Holy Spirit never spoke by their mouths; thus denying them the grace of the Holy Spirit. He said: "If the Holy Spirit had been in them, they would not have gone down into hell." Next he supported these false doctrines by the assertion that all the good actions done by the patriarchs and prophets were reckoned by God to Satan, which is as much as to say that Satan helped them to do good deeds without the Holy Spirit. This doctrine he supported by his belief that the good works done by the disciples and the rest of the people of Christ are reckoned to Christ, because they did these works by the Holy Spirit.

gender when it denotes the Holy Spirit, الْقُدُّوسُ or الرُّوحُ الْقُدُّسُ. The ancient form was رُوحُ الْقُدُّوسِ، from the Syriac مَهْمَّةٌ.

الآئمَّةُ الثالث يَعْمِلُونَ بِخَاتَمِ الْأَنْبَيَّاقِ لَا هُوَ الرُّوحُ الْقُدُّوسُ الْمُبَعَّثُ مِنَ الْأَبِ ارْبِلَا

'The third Person [of the Trinity] is distinguished by the appropriate character of procession, for He is the Holy Spirit who proceeds, that is to say, issues from the Father eternally.'

He held also that none has died from the time of Adam onwards except for committing some sin for which he deserved death ; and that the body of Christ alone did not commit any sin, for which it deserved death ; and that when he died he received from his Father all that were imprisoned in hell, through the merit of his death ; and in one place he says, “he received from Satan all that were imprisoned in hell.” Thus Mark implies that the Lady died on account of sin alone, and so others beside her who are justified in the Gospel and the Old Testament. He held also that after the death of men and their assembling in paradise, there happens to those who have not been chastised in this life¹ the same that happened to Adam ; and he held that punishment and recompense in the next world belong to the ‘Question: Are the souls of the faithful profited by prayers and good works ?

‘Answer: Yes. The prayers of the church and the offering of the Holy Sacrifice and the performance of good works profit those souls which have died still tainted by some of the imperfections and weaknesses of human nature, but not those which are sunk in vice and are reprobate without hope of repentance or forgiveness. This truth has been taught by the universal Church of Christ from intelligent and reasonable soul apart from the body ; but that chastisement in this world is for the body, in order that, to avoid the pains of penance, it may not again consent with the soul in the commission of sin; then it will be saved on the last day.

Certain Wonders of Egypt.

§ Section in which the fishing-place¹ is described. In the neighbourhood of the Nile, there is a place at which on a particular day much fish collects ; and the people of that place go out and fish with their hands, and none of the fish escape from them ; so that the people of that place catch enough to be eaten or salted by all of them. But when the sun has set on that day not one of them catches a single fish more ; nor during that year are fish found at that place, until that particular day comes round again.

§ Account of the City of Stone². Everything in this city is of hard black stone. There is the image of a teacher, sitting with his boys, who stand before him in large numbers both small and great ; and there are the likenesses of lions and wild beasts and other things.

§ Account of the moving pillar³ in the land of Egypt. This is the first ages, and the Church of Israel bears witness in the second Book of Maccabees that Judas Maccabaeus offered sacrifices for the departed warriors (2 Macc. xii. 43).'

¹ This fishing-place is not mentioned by Al-Makrizî among the 'wonders of the Nile.'

² Madīnat al-Hajar, or the City of Stone, is still existing in the south of the Fayyûm, close to the village of Al-Gharâk. There is an ancient sculptured gateway and some columns and other remains of an ancient city.

a marble pillar, rising to the height of about seventeen cubits above the ground, and its diameter is two cubits. It moves on one day of the year, making one motion.

§ Account of the tree¹, which only bears fruit when a man runs towards it with an axe, as if he wishes to cut it down; and another man meets him and forbids him to cut it down, and guarantees to him on behalf of it that it will bear fruit. And in truth in the ensuing year it bears a quantity of fruit equal to that of two years.

'skilfully constructed, so that if a man pushes it it inclines to the right and to the left; but the movement is not visible externally except in the shadow of the minaret in the sunshine.' (Husn al-Muhádaraḥ, i. p. ۱۰۰.)

Cf. Ibn Dukmák, who says, in speaking of Abwît:

وَبِهَذِهِ الْبَلَدَةِ أَعْجُونَةٌ وَهِيَ مَنَارَتُهَا يَصْدُعُ عَلَيْهَا وَتَهُزُّ وَتَهُزُّ وَتَمْيِلُ وَلَا يَعْلَمُ مَا سَبَبَ ذَلِكَ
'In this town there is a wonder, namely, its minaret, which is ascended, and, if it is pushed, yields to the push, and leans to one side; and the cause of this is unknown.' (Op. cit., v. p. ۱۰۰.)

Al-Makrîzî tells a similar tale of the minaret of Barzakh, a suburb of Damietta; see Khiṭāṭ, i. p. ۲۲.

¹ This is no more than a grossly exaggerated report of the well-known sensitive properties of the Mimosa Nilotica, named سنت in Arabic.

Al-Makrîzî gives the following account in his description of the wonders of Egypt:

وَمِنْ عَجَائِبِهَا أَنْ بِصَعِيدَهَا خَصِيَّةٌ تَعْرُفُ بِدَشْنِي فِيهَا سَنْطَةٌ إِذَا تَهَدَّدَتْ بِالْقَطْعِ تَذَبَّلُ وَتَجْتَمِعُ
وَتَضَمِرُ فَيَقَالُ لَهَا قَدْ عَفَوْنَا عَنْكَ وَتَرْكَنَاكَ فَتَرْجَعُ وَالْمَسْهُورُ وَهُوَ الْمَوْجُودُ إِنَّ سَنْطَةً فِي الصَّعِيدِ
إِذَا نَزَّلْتَ الْيَدَ عَلَيْهَا ذَبَّلْتَ وَإِذَا رَفَعْتَ عَنْهَا تَرَاجَعَتْ

'Among the wonders of Egypt is this: that in Upper Egypt there is a hamlet called Dashni, in which there grows a mimosa-tree; and if this mimosa is threatened with being cut down it withers away and shrinks up and grows smaller; but when they say to it, "We have forgiven thee, we will spare thee," then the tree recovers. It is a well-known thing and true at the present day that there is a mimosa in Upper Egypt which withers away if the hand is laid upon it, and recovers when the hand is removed.' § Account of the stones¹ which are found at a place called Al-Barmak, between Khuraij and Yakhtâk. It is on the side of a mountain, and when a caravan or a troop of soldiers passes by, they bind much wool on the hoofs of their horses, and so make the ascent; for if these stones struck against one another, a dark mist would rise at once and would prevent their progress, and an exceedingly heavy rain would descend. It is said that the wise men of this country fixed these stones in this district; and, when rain was slow in coming to them, they moved these stones by their arts, so that rain came to them whenever a rainfall was needed. This is related in the biography of Al-Mu'tasim²; and certain of the chronicles contain the account of it, which is a true one.

² The eighth of the Abbaside caliphs; son of Hârûn ar-Rashîd, and brother and successor of Al-Mâ'mûn. Reigned at Bagdad from A. H. 218 to 227 = A. D. 833-842; see Abû 'l-Fidâ, Annales, ii. pp. 166-176.

³ The following passage is repeated almost word for word below, fol. 68 b ff. It is also quoted by Quatremère, Mém. Hist. et Géogr. i. p. 110 ff. Our author, followed by Quatremère, evidently confuses Bûşîr Wanâ or Banâ with Bûşîr Kûridus, which lies to the south of Cairo, at the entrance to the Fayyûm. Bûşîr Kûridus is, however, spoken of by name on fol. 92 b. Bûşîr Wanâ or Banâ is situated in the district of Samannûd, in the province of Al-Gharbiyah, and is therefore wrongly placed, both here and on fol. 68 b, in Southern or Upper Egypt. The town has now 5,359 inhabitants. It is near the town of Banâ or Wanâ, here called (beginning of fol. 18 a) Wanâ Bûşîr. The Coptic form of Bûşîr is ἷος τις, and of Banâ or Wanâ ΠΑΝΑ. Four Bûşîrs are mentioned by Yâkût: Bûşîr Banâ in the district of Samannûd; Bûşîr Kûridus; Bûşîr Dafadnû in the Fayyûm; and Bûşîr as-Sidr in the province of Al-Jizah. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. vi.; Al-Idrisî (ed. Rome) [p. 117]; Amélineau, Geogr. pp. 7-11.

town contains a large church, very spacious, built of stone, and situated within the city, near the fortress. It was constructed in ancient times ; and as time went by, and the kings required the stone of which it is constructed, much of this material was taken away from it. The church is now a ruin, but its remains are still conspicuous ; they stand near the prison¹ of Joseph the Truthful, that is to say the son of Jacob, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham, the Friend of God, upon whom be peace.

§ The city of Wanâ² contains the church of George³.

قال القضايى سجن يوسف عليه السلام ببصیر من عمل الجیزة اجمع اهل المعرفة من اهل مصر على صحة ذلك المكان

‘Al-Kudâ'i says : The prison of Joseph, upon whom be peace ! is at Bûşîr in the province of Al-Jîzah ; all the learned men of Egypt are agreed upon the authenticity of this spot.’ (Khitât, i. p. r.v.) This passage of Al-Kudâ'i is also quoted by Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iii. p. ۴۶. Al-Makrizî goes on to state that the flat roof of the ‘prison’ was called Ijâbat ad-Dû'â,—the ‘answer to prayer,’—and that it was much visited at particular times by those who had special petitions to make : notably by Kâfûr al-Ikhshîdî.

As-Suyûti speaks of the prison as standing to the north of the pyramids, which are still known as the Pyramids of Abûşîr, and are a little to the north of Sakkarah, and about six miles to the south of Al-Jîzah.

Bûşîr or Abûşîr as-Sidr is now in the district of Badrashain, and had in 1885 a population of 1,848. In the fourteenth century, as it appears from the revenue-lists, the place was of great importance. Amélineau, Géogr. p. 10.

The pyramids of Bûşîr and the mummies found there are described by ‘Abd al-Laṭîf, Mukhtaṣar Akhbâr Miṣr, ed. White, pp. 156, 158.

² Wanâ or Banâ is near Bûşîr Wanâ, as it has already been remarked. It was the seat of a Coptic bishopric. It is also called, as it may be seen a few lines lower down, Wanâ or Banâ Bûşîr. It was named in Greek Κυνόπολις, and in Coptic Π&Ν&Τ ; it is now included in the district of Samannûd in the province of Al-Gharbîyah ; and it had in 1885 a population of 3,021. See Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 117] ; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 84 f. ; Recensement de l'Égypte, ii. p. 69.

³ This church is mentioned by Al-Makrizî, see Appendix. We shall find, as we proceed, that this was one of the most frequent dedications in Egypt. Our author mentions forty-two churches or monasteries named after St. George. He is, as it is well known, the famous Cappadocian martyr, probably the first who suffered under Diocletian, and with whose name the legend of the dragon is connected. At the time of the Crusades, St. George was proclaimed champion of Christendom, and in the reign of Edward III he was formally adopted by our countrymen as their patron saint, in addition to the former patrons of England, Our Lady and St. Peter. The martyrdom of St. George is commemorated by the Copts on Barmūdah 23 = April 18; whereas the western calendar gives his name to April 23. His Acts exist in Coptic and Ethiopic. See Zoega, Cat. Codd. Copt. cod. cliii; Budge, Martyrdom and Miracles of St. George, with Coptic text and translation. The extreme limit of scepticism with regard to this saint is reached by M. Amélineau, who regards his Acts, in all their versions, as pure romance (Contes et romans de l'Égypte chrétienne, ii. p. 167 ff.)

§ At Munyat al-Kā'id¹ there is a church. It was restored by Faḍl ibn Ṣāliḥ, who had been a page to the vizier Abū 'l-Faraj ibn Killis², in the caliphate of Al-Ḥākim³; it is named after Our Lady the Virgin⁴, Fol. 18 a and stands near the river.

² كليس is written by a clerical error here and on fol. 69 a as كليمين. Abū 'l-Faraj ibn Killis was vizier to Al-'Azīz from A.D. 979 to A.D. 990, see Ibn Khallikān, iv. p. 359 ff.; As-Suyūṭī, Husn al-Muḥādarah, ii. p. 101.

⁴ The dedication of churches to the Virgin was more frequent in Egypt,

§ Wanâ Bûṣîr¹ contains a church named after the great and valiant martyr Mercurius², and two other churches—one dedicated to Our Lady the Pure Virgin, and the second to the holy martyr Saint George³, besides a church to the martyr John⁴, who is also named as might be expected, than any other dedication. More than fifty-five churches of the Virgin are mentioned by our author as existing in Egypt in his time.

² After Our Lady and St. George this is one of the most popular dedications in Egypt. Our author mentions about thirty churches of St. Mercurius. This saint is one of the very few commemorated in the Coptic Synaxarium or Calendar among those who suffered in the time of Decius. According to the Coptic authorities, Mercurius was born at Rome, and was originally called Philopator. He was a great 'hunter of wild beasts,' but eventually became a soldier, and an angel gave him a two-edged sword with which he slew his enemies. It is this two-edged sword which has become two swords in the popular legend, and has earned for the saint the Arabic cognomen of Abû 's-Saifain, 'father' or 'owner of the two swords;' and the Coptic artists accordingly represent him brandishing a sword in each hand. Mercurius was beheaded at Caesarea in Cappadocia during the persecution of Decius; and his martyrdom is commemorated by the Copts on Hatûr 25 = Nov. 21. There was also a bishop Mercurius, who was present at the Council of Nicaea, and whose festival is kept on Barmahât 1 = Feb. 25; and another Mercurius whose day is Bâbah 28 = Oct. 25. It is curious that the Dictionary of Christian Biography does not mention the name Mercurius. St. Mercurius the martyr of Caesarea is commemorated by the Greek church also, but on Nov. 25 instead of Nov. 21. See Butler, Coptic Churches, i. p. 76, and ii. pp. 357-9; Malan, Calendar of Coptic Church, p. 12 and p. 59, note 34; Wüstenfeld, Synaxarium, p. 135 f.; Amélineau, Actes des Martyrs de l'Église Copte, p. 16 ff.; Menologium Graecorum in Op. et Stud. Hannibalis Clementis, tom. i. p. 212. (A. J. B.)

⁴ There are more martyrs than one of this name in the Coptic calendar. See below, fol. 56.

Abû Yuhannûs, and whose pure body is preserved in this church. There is also a church to the glorious angel, Michael the Archangel.

§ At Idrîjah¹, one of the villages of Bûsh², there is a church to the great martyr Saint George.

§ Tansa³ contains a church, named after Nahâdah⁴, and churches named after the valiant⁵ martyr Mercurius, the glorious angel Gabriel, and Our Lady the Pure Virgin.

The Fayyûm.

§ Madînat al-Fayyûm⁶ and its province. Al-Fayyûm was the name of one of the sons of Kift⁷, the son of Mizraim, who built it for one

² Bûsh or Bûsh Kurâ was the Coptic ΠΟΥΨΙΝ, and still exists a little to the north of Banî Suwaif, with a population in 1885 of 7,091 inhabitants. The district is still a Christian centre, and contains the second monastery, in point of size and wealth, in Egypt. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. ۷۰۸; Amélineau, Geogr. p. 366 ff. (A. J. B.)

⁵ الشَّجَاعُ, ‘the valiant,’ is an epithet especially applied to St. Mercurius and St. Theodore.

⁶ ‘The capital of the Fayyûm,’ still existing, and having in 1885 a population of 25,799. It was the Greek Arsinoe or Crocodilopolis. The name Fayyûm is, as it is well known, the Coptic ΦΙΟΣΣΑ = ‘the sea’ or ‘lake:’ a name given on account of Lake Moeris, identified by some with the modern Birkat al-Kurân, but by Mr. Cope Whitehouse with the low ground, now dry land, in the Wâdî Rayân, to the south of the Fayyûm. See Al-Makrîzî, Khiṣâṭ, i. p. ۱۴۱; Amélineau, Geogr. p. 339 ff.

The following passage on the Fayyûm is repeated on fol. 70 f.

of his daughters who had brought dishonour upon herself, so that he banished her thither. The city existed before the time of Joseph¹, the son of Jacob, the son of Abraham the Friend of God, upon whom be peace! and Joseph rebuilt it. He also made the Nilometer². And he built [Madinat] al-Fayyûm and Hajar al-Lâhûn³, which was built with wisdom, founded with divine assistance, and constructed by the inspiration of God. Joseph also dug the canal of Al-Manhî⁴. He supposed personages in remote antiquity. Many towns were supposed to be named after sons of Kift, who was said to have divided the land of Egypt among them. Most of these legends or traditions may be traced to the Arabic historian Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, who died in A. H. 257 (?), and from whom Al-Kindî, Al-Kudâ'î, Al-Mâkrîzî, and As-Suyûtî borrowed so much of their work. See As-Suyûtî, Husn al-Muhâddarah, i. p. r.. The name Kift was in reality borrowed from the town of Kift or Coptos, and from its resemblance to the Arabic term denoting the Egyptians, namely Kibît (قبط), an apocopated form of Alyúrrîos, turned by us into ('Copt'), gave rise to the legend of an ancestor of the whole nation, of that name, the founder of that city.

² Al-Mâkrîzî quotes Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam's own words, to which without doubt our author is referring :

قال ابن عبد لله اول من قاس النيل بمصر يوسف عليه سلام وضع مقياساً بنف

'Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam says: The first who measured the rise of the Nile in Egypt was Joseph, upon whom be peace! who set up a Nilometer at Memphis.' Cf. below, fol. 68 a, 69 b, 70 b; cf. also Diodorus, Bibl. Hist. i. cap. 36, who speaks of the earliest Nilometer as being at Memphis; and Herodotus, ii. cap. 13, who implies the existence of a Nilometer at Memphis under king Moeris.

cultivated the land of Egypt. The Fayyûm contained three hundred and sixty-six districts, according to the number of days in the year¹, each district corresponding to a day ; and the yearly revenue from each canton was a thousand dinars. The lands of this district are laid under water when the river rises twelve cubits ; but are not entirely submerged with eighteen cubits. There are here tracts of common land², in which no one has the right of property ; for men are allowed to make use of still in working order, and flows from a spot named Râs al-Manhî or 'Head of Al-Manhî,' near Darwah Sarabâm (fol. 77 b), to Hajar al-Lâhûn, where it branches out into the many canals which irrigate the Fayyûm. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch, iii. p. 1111; Mardqid al-Ittilâd ad voc.; Al-Makrîzî, Khiṭat, i. p. vi.

نِيَّا مِنَ الْمَبَاحِ مَا لَيْسَ عَلَيْهِ مُلْكٌ لَّا حَدٌ مِّنْ مُسْلِمٍ وَلَا مُعَاهِدٍ يَسْتَعْنِيْنَ بِهِ الْقَوِيُّ وَالْمُنْعِيْفُ
فَإِذَا هُوَ فَوْقَ السَّبْعِينِ صَنْفًا

'In the Fayyûm there is common land in which none has the right of property whether Muslim or of the allied peoples; and all, both rich and poor, may demand a share of it; and it consists of more than seventy sorts of land.'

Al-Kindî, followed by our author, is speaking of the different sorts of crops grown on the land. Seventy different crops seems a high number, unless every variety is to be separately enumerated. Al-Makrîzî gives a list of the principal crops of Egypt, and names thirty-nine of them, without reckoning all the kinds of fruit-trees, and without counting all the different species and varieties of each genus. He names wheat, barley, beans, lentils, chick-peas, flat peas, flax, leeks, onions, garlic, lupins, water-melons, haricots, sesame, cotton, sugar-cane, colocasia, egg-plant, indigo, radish, turnip, lettuce, cabbage, vine, fig, apple, mulberry, almond, peach, apricot, date-palm, narcissus, jasmine, myrtle, beetroot, gillyflower, banana, cassia, lotus-tree. See the section entitled :

ذَكْرُ اصْنَافِ ارْضِ مِصْرِ وَاقْسَامِ زَرَاعَةِ

'Account of the different kinds of land in Egypt and of the various crops grown there,' in Khiṭat, ii. p. 1... ff.

it as they please, and to demand a share of it according to their circumstances, and the land is of seventy kinds. The revenue of the Fayyûm was estimated by Ibn Tarkhân in the time of Kâfûr al-Ustâdh¹, Emir of Egypt, generally known by the appellation of Al-Ikhshîdî, under the Abbaside dynasty², in the year of the Arabs 355, when the revenue amounted to 620,000 dinars³; and this equals the amount calculated to come from Ar-Ramlah⁴ and Tiberias and Damascus.

¹ Abû 'l-Misk Kâfûr al-Ustâdh, or the eunuch, was the son of 'Abd Allâh. He was a negro slave, sold, it is said for eighteen dinars, in A. H. 312 = A.D. 924 to Abû Bakr Muhammad ibn Tughj al-Ikhshîd, governor of Egypt, who subsequently emancipated him and appointed him guardian over his two sons. When Al-Ikhshîd died in A. H. 334 = A. D. 946, his eldest son Abû 'l-Kâsim Anûjûr became ruler of Egypt, but the state was actually administered by Kâfûr, who is known as Al-Ikhshîdî on account of his having belonged to Al-Ikhshîd. When Anûjûr died in A. H. 349 = A. D. 960, his brother Abû 'l-Hasan 'Alî succeeded to the government of Egypt, and Kâfûr acted as his lieutenant, as he had acted for his brother. 'Alî died in A. H. 355 = A. D. 966, and then Kâfûr became uncontrolled ruler of Egypt, as the son of 'Alî was too young to reign; and this state of affairs continued until the death of the negro in A. H. 357 = A. D. 968. Kâfûr is celebrated as the most successful and powerful of all the black eunuchs who rose to eminence under Mahometan rule. The poet Al-Mutanabbi wrote in his praise. See Abû 'l-Mahâsin, ed. Juynboll and Matthes, ii. pp. ۲۷۰-۲۹۳; Ibn al-Athîr, viii. pp. ۴۱۹-۴۲۱; Al-Makrizî, Khiṭat, i. p. ۲۲۱; Ibn Khallikân, trans. De Slane, ii. p. 524; As-Suyûṭî, Husn al-Muhâdarah, ii. p. ۱۰. (A. J. B.)

² The Abbaside caliph reigning at Bagdad in A. H. 355 = A. D. 966 was Al-Mutî', who was proclaimed in A. H. 334 = A. D. 946, and abdicated in A. H. 363 = A. D. 974.

³ This statement seems to be borrowed from Ibn Zûlâk:

Fayyûm was reckoned for Kâfûr al-Ikhshîdî in this year, namely the year 356, as yielding a revenue of more than 620,000 dinars.' (Al-Makrizî, Khiṭat, i. p. ۲۲۱.)

There were in this province thirty-three monasteries within its borders. In the patriarchate of Theodore¹, the forty-fifth in the order of succession, the name of the bishop of the Fayyûm was Anba Abraham², and the revenue received into the treasury of the govern-

وكان هناك الاب الاسقف انبأ ابراهيم اسقف الفيوم لاجل امرهم فلما حضرنا ايضًا دعا واحدة من السراري وكانت مغربية فقال لانبأ ابراهيم هذه ابنتك وجعل يده في يدها وكان قلبها كالاطفال وقال له انت تعلم انني احبك جداً من زمان ابي وكلما كنت تطلبة من ابي افعله لك فقال له القديس ابراهيم نعم فقال له اريد منك ثلثمائة دينار فتقدمت اليه ابي الارشى دياقون معه وكان انتفامة اسمه سمعان كان قد جاء معه وهو الذي استحق الاسقفية من بعده فقال له احضر الشلثمائة دينار فاحضرها وسلمها للقاسم وكان له مال كبير للبيع لأن كان عنده في كرسية خمسة وثلاثين دير بالفيوم وهو المتولى عليهم وكان عليه خراج خمس مائة دينار الذي لبيت مال السلطان لاجل ذلك وكانت تجار مصر يباعونه وبشتروا منه

'And the bishop Anba Abraham, bishop of the Fayyûm, was present on matters of their business. And when we entered the presence of Al-Kâsim the next time, he called one of his odalisques who was from Western Africa, and he said to Anba Abraham: "This is thy daughter;" and he laid the bishop's hand upon her hand, for his heart was as the heart of children. And he said to the bishop: "Thou knowest that I have loved thee deeply since my father's time, and all that thou didst ask of my father I will do for thee." And the holy Abraham said to him: "It is good." So Al-Kâsim continued: "I desire of thee 300 dinars." Then the archdeacon who accompanied the bishop, and whose name was Simeon, and who was afterwards found worthy to succeed him as bishop, came to him and ment, from the crops grown on the lands of these monasteries, amounted to five hundred dinars yearly.

It is said in the Book¹ of the Conquest of Egypt by the Muslims he said to him: "Bring the 300 dinars." So he brought them and gave them to Al-Kâsim. Now Anba Abraham had much money derived from church property; for he had in his diocese thirty-five monasteries, in the Fayyûm; and he was the administrator of their goods; and he was bound to pay a land-tax of 500 dinars into the public treasury of the government on their account. He was the head of all of them, and the merchants of Egypt sold to him and bought from him.' MS. in Bib. Nat. Paris, numbered Anc. Fonds Arabe 139, p. 142, lines 5-13.

ذكر عبد الرحمن بن عبد الله بن عبد لكم قال حدثنا هشام بن إسحاق أن يوسف لما ولی مصر عظمت منزلته من فرعون وجاشت سُنَّة مائة ستة قالت وزراء الملك ان يوسف ذهب علمه وتغير عقله ونفذت حكمته فعندهم فرعون ورد عليهم مقالتهم واسألا لفظ لهم فلکروا ثم عادووه بذلك القول بعد سنين فقال لهم هلئوا ما شئتم من شيء فختبروه به وكانت الفيوم يومئذ تدعى للبوة وإنما كانت لصالحة ماء الصعيد وفضلة فاجتمع رايهم على أن تكون الحنة التي يتعجن بها يوسف فقالوا لفرعون سل يوسف أن يصرف ماء للبوة فيزداد بلد إلى بلد وخرج إلى خرابتك فدعا يوسف وقال قد تعلم مكان ابنتي فلانة مني فقد رأيت إذا بلغت أن اطلب لها بذلك وإنما لم أصيّب لها إلا للبوة وذلك انه بليد قريب لا يوثق من ناحية من نواحي مصر الا من مفارقة او صحراء الى الان قال والفيوم وسط مصر كمثل مصر في وسط البلاد لأن مصر لا تقوى من ناحية من نواحٍ الا من صحراء او مفارقة وقد اقطعتها ايها فلا تتركن وجهها ولا نظراً الا وبلغتها فقال يوسف نعم ايها الملك متى اردت ذلك عملته قال ان اجبه الى اعجلة فاوحي الى يوسف ان تجعف ثلاثة خليج خليجاً من أعلى الصعيد من موضع كذا الى موضع كذا وخليجاً شرقياً من موضع كذا الى موضع كذا وخليجاً غربياً من موضع كذا الى موضع كذا فوضع يوسف العمال فجعف خليج النهري من أعلى اشمون الى الاهرون &c.

'Abd ar-Rahmân ibn 'Abd Allâh ibn 'Abd al-Hakam says: I learnt from Hishâm that the Fayyûm was known as the Waste Ground ; it was an outlet for the waters of Upper Egypt. Joseph the Truthful dug the canal here, and brought the water through it, and the Nile began to flow into it. Joseph was of the age of thirty years, in the reign of Ar-Rayyân¹, the ibn Ishâk that when Joseph governed Egypt his dignity was increased by Pharaoh. And, when Joseph's age had passed a hundred years, the viziers of the kingdom said, "Joseph's understanding has decayed, and his reason is disturbed, and his wisdom is departed." But Pharaoh reprimanded them and denied their statements and softened down their words, and they refrained from repeating them. Then after some years they repeated their charge, so Pharaoh said to them, "Come, suggest something by which we may try him !" Now in those days the Fayyûm was called the Waste Land, and moreover it was an outlet for the superfluous waters of Upper Egypt ; so they all agreed that this should be the test by which to try Joseph. So they said to Pharaoh, "Desire Joseph to spread abroad the waters of the Waste Land, so that fresh territory may be added to your dominions and fresh revenues to your revenues." So he called Joseph, and said, "Thou knowest the place of my daughter such an one ; I have determined when she grows up to seek for her a city, and I have not found any for her except the Waste Land, which is a small town, near to us, but which cannot be reached from any part of Egypt except by passing through deserts and wildernesses up to this time. For the Fayyûm is in the midst of Egypt as Egypt is in the midst of the countries, for Egypt cannot be reached from any part except by passing through deserts. I have settled this district upon my daughter. Do not therefore leave any means untried by which thou mayest gain thy object." So Joseph answered, "Yea, O king, if this be thy desire I will perform it." Pharaoh said, "The sooner it is done the better it will please me." Then an inspiration from God came to Joseph that he should dig three canals ; one from the further part of Upper Egypt, from such a place to such a place, and one in the east from such a place to such a place, and one in the west from such a place to such a place. And Joseph disposed the workmen and dug the canal of Al-Manhî, from a point above Ushmûnain to Al-Lâhûn.' Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch. iv. p. ۴۷۷ f. Cf. Al-Makrizî, Khitâb, i. p. ۱۱۰, where the same passage is quoted ; As-Suyûtî, Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. ۱۱.

son of Dauma¹, surnamed Pharaoh, after the interpretation of the dream and the explanation of it. Pharaoh clothed Joseph with a robe of honour, and entrusted him with his signet-ring and with the administration of his kingdom.

Certain matters concerning Egypt.

Fol. 19 a § The seventeenth section¹ of the history of the church, and the biography of Anba Khâ'îl², the forty-sixth patriarch, contains an estimate of the yearly revenues of Egypt, at the end of the caliphate of Marwân³, the 'Ass of War,' the last caliph of the dynasty of the Omeyyads, and at the beginning of the caliphate of As-Saffâh⁴ 'Abd Allâh, the Abbaside, which sets the amount carried into the public treasury at 200,000 dinars, apart from the expenses⁵. ✓ called him Nahrâ'ûsh. It is impossible at the present day to say whence the names of the ancient Pharaohs found in Arab writers were derived; none of them seems to be known to Muhammed in the Koran. The names seem to have been borrowed by later writers from Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, who was himself indebted to Ibn Ishâk.

² Occupied the see from A.D. 743 to 766 according to Renaudot, Hist. Patr. pp. 203-236. The name خائيل, Khâ'îl, is an abbreviated form of ميخائيل, Mîkhâ'il or Michael. Another form of the name is خيال, Khâyâl. The biography of Michael, included in the history of the patriarchs compiled by Severus of Ushmûnain, is one of the most important parts of that work, and is the contemporary composition of John the Deacon, who was an eyewitness of many of the events which he relates. See MS. Anc. Fonds Arabe 139, pp. 140-191. ✓

⁴ The first of the Abbaside caliphs, who overthrew the Omeyyad dynasty. Reigned A.H. 133-137 = A.D. 751-755.

وكان ارتفاع مصر بعد اقطاعات الاجناد ونفات دار السلطان وما يحتاج اليه لتدبير الملكة

§ The first worshippers of idols were the people of Egypt and Babylon, and the Franks and the people of the sea-coast. In the days of Kuhtān, the son of Fālik, the father of the Arabs, men made likenesses of all that were renowned for virtue, and of good repute, and famous for valour and beauty of form, and worshipped their images.

§ Abū Naiṭur¹, the fourth son of Noah, learnt, through the inspiration of God, the science of the sphere², and the art of reckoning it by years, months, days, and hours, and the like. Afterwards Nimrod³ the giant learnt from him, and composed books on the science of the sphere, and on reckoning it; and men wondered at the wisdom which he showed in his books, and copied them after him, so that Ardashīr envied him; and Nimrod also served Satan, and fasted for him, and offered sacrifice to him, and burnt incense to him, and humbled himself before him. Therefore Satan appeared to him, and taught him magic⁴, and how to raise false phantoms; and

'The revenues of Egypt, after deducting the pay of the troops and the expenses of the governor's house and what was needed for the administration of the country, amounted to 200,000,000 dinars carried yearly to the public treasury.' MS. Anc. Fonds Arabe 139, p. 180, line 25, p. 181, lines 1, 2. The figures have been altered.

² I.e. astronomy. As it is well known, the Arabs derived their first knowledge of astronomy from the Arabic translation, made by order of the caliph Ma'mūn, of the Almagest of Ptolemy, and it is from that work that the term نَجْل = σφαῖρα is borrowed.

في عصره كان نمرود للبار ملك بابل ويقال انه اول ملك ملك ببابل وابصر شبه الاقليل
في السما من سحاب فدعى صانغا فصاغ له اقليل ووضعه على راسه ومن اجل هذا كانوا
الناس يقولون نزل له تاج من السما

‘In his time lived Nimrod the giant, king of Babylon. It is said that he was the first king who reigned in Babylon ; and he saw in the sky the likeness of a crown formed of clouds ; so he called a goldsmith, who fashioned a crown for him, and he put it upon his head. For this reason men said that a diadem descended upon him from heaven.’ Eutychius, Annales (ed. Pococke), i. p. 62. Cf. MS. Bodl. Or. 294, p. 60.

The epithet جبار, ‘giant,’ corresponds to בָּנָי in Genesis x. 8, 9.

Some of these legends of Nimrod may be looked upon as genuine traditions of the ancient culture of Babylonia.

Askar still exists in the district of Itṣḥâyah in the province of Al-Jâzâh ; see Rec. de l’Egypte, ii. p. 51.

In Egypt Moses divided the sea, and performed the ten miracles. Joseph the Truthful¹ ruled over Egypt.

In Egypt also is the palm-tree. Here is the Holy Valley², and the fissure of the *Abū Kīr*³, to which the birds of that species go on pilgrimage every year. One bird is caught in this fissure, and remains hanging there until the winds blow it to pieces. In this country also is the *Hādīt al-'Ajāz*⁴, from Al-'Arish to Aswān; which is sometimes called Hādīt al-Hujaz.

قَالَتِ امْرَأَةُ الْعَزِيزِ إِنَّ حَمْخَنَ الْحَقُّ أَنَا رَأَوْتُهُ عَنْ نَفْسِي وَلَئِنْ الصَّادِقِينَ

'The wife of Al-'Aziz said: Now the truth is made manifest. It was I who tempted him to sin. Surely he is one of the truthful.'

Compare ver. 46:

يُوسُفُ أَيُّهَا الصَّدِيقُ أَفْتَنَنَا فِي سَبْعٍ بَقَرَاتٍ سِمَانٍ

'O Joseph the Truthful! teach us with regard to the seven fat kine,' &c.

² I can only conjecture that this may mean the Wâdî Naṭrûn or Wâdî Ḥabîb, the ancient Nitrian valley, so famous in the annals of monasticism.

بَلْ سُودُ الاعْنَاقِ مَطْوَقَاتُ الْرَّاصلِ سُودُ اطْرَافِ الْاجْنَحةِ

'They are piebald, with black necks, striped on the breast, with black tips to their wings.' Husn al-Muḥḍarāh, i. p. ۲۹.

Al-Makrîzî says that the prodigy had ceased in his time. Khiṭat, ii. p. ۵۰۱ f.; cf. i. p. ۱۷.

'Wall of the old woman,' also called Jisr al-'Ajāz, 'dyke of the old woman.' It still exists in portions near Jabal at-Tair, near Kūshiyah, and at other places.

The 'old woman' is said by some writers to be Dalûkah (see fol. ۷۰ b), who

In the river Nile there is a fish, which is called the 'thunder-fish'¹. Even if a strong man places his hand upon it, his strength will not prevent him from receiving a shock through his body, and his arm will remain thunderstruck and will be paralysed during the space of an hour.

In this country is the meeting-place of the two seas, which is called the Isthmus²; here the two seas approach one another. Between them are two dykes³. The two seas are the sea of the Romans and the sea of the Chinese⁴; and the dyke is a journey of one night⁵ from both of reigned over Egypt in remote antiquity. The purpose of the wall is said to have been to defend Egypt from her enemies. Another story makes the old woman build the wall to prevent the lions from coming down to the Nile to drink, in revenge for the death of her son, who had been devoured by a lion. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. ii. p. 11.; Al-Makrîzî, Khitât, i. p. 11; As-Suyûti, Husn al-Muhibârah, i. p. 11.

Our author, on fol. 57 b, makes Cleopatra the builder of the Hâ'it al-'Ajûz, which extended not only from Al-'Arîsh or Al-Faramâ to Aswân on the eastern bank of the Nile, but also from Nubia to Alexandria on the western bank. In these statements he follows Eutychius, Annales (ed. Pococke), i. p. 301.

The statement of Diodorus that Sesostris built a wall 1,500 stades in length, to protect Egypt on the east from the Syrians and the Arabs, is well known; see Diod. Sic., Bibl. Hist. bk. i. cap. 57.

² I.e. Isthmus of Suez. This passage is partly repeated on fol. 58 a.

³ The high ground to the north of Lake Timsâh is still called Al-Jîsr, 'the dyke.'

⁴ Our author here treats the Red Sea as part of the Indian Ocean, and the latter as part of the China Sea.

them, between Al-Kulzum¹ and Al-Faramâ². In no other country do the seas approach nearer to one another than at this place; for in the east there is a journey of several months between them. There is no country in the world in which the people eat fresh fish from both seas, ✓ except Egypt.

يحمل اليهم الماء في المراكب ومن موضع على بريد سمي سويس على اليمال ماء آجع
ردي ومن امثالهم ميرة اهل القلزم من بلبيس وشريهم من سويس يأكلون لحم التيس

'Water is conveyed to them in boats; and from a place called Suwais (Suez), at a distance of one post, bad, discoloured water is carried to them upon camels; so that one of their proverbs says: The people of Al-Kulzum receive their provisions from Bilbaïs, and their drink from Suwais, and they eat the flesh of the Tais (wild goat)' (ed. De Goeje), p. 196. This passage was not made use of by Quatremère in his discussion of the position of Al-Kulzum, Mém. Hist. et Géogr. i. pp. 151-189. The distance of one post or about twelve miles is too great, as the ruins of Al-Kulzum are placed by Niebuhr about one mile to the north of Suez. See also Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iv. p. 168; Marâqid al-Ittildâ (ed. Juynboll), ad voc.; Al-Idrisî (ed. Rome) [p. 49]; Al-Makrizî, Khiṣṭat, p. 211.

The last of these writers says that in his day Al-Kulzum was ruined and its site was known as Suez. This is inaccurate, as it has just been shown.

² The classical Pelusium, and the Coptic περελούτη, near the north-eastern frontier of Egypt; cf. fol. 56 b. It has now disappeared, with the exception of some mounds and broken columns. Al-Makrizî reckons the ancient remains at Al-Faramâ among the wonders of Egypt; see Khiṣṭat, i. p. 21.

It was at Al-Faramâ that the first engagement took place between the Arabs and Egyptians when 'Amr invaded Egypt in A. H. 18; see As-Suyûṭî, Husn al-Muhâddarah, i. p. 116.

¹ The fine tissues of Tinnis are much celebrated by Arab historians and geographers. Ibn Haukal, who wrote in A.H. 367 = A.D. 978, says of Tinnis and Damietta :

'In these two cities are manufactured fine Dabik and sharb and splendid dyed garments, the equals of which in beauty and price do not exist in the whole world' (ed. De Goeje, p. 101).

Al-Makrizi (Khiyat, i. p. 181) says that the veils for the Ka'bah were made at Tinnis from the early times of Islam, and he describes some of the designs upon them. These manufactures ceased when the people of Tinnis were removed to Damietta in A.H. 588 = A.D. 1192, and only the citadel remained inhabited.

The foundation of the stuffs of Tinnis is said to have been linen (Ibn Haukal, loc. cit.), with which silk was interwoven. Cf. Quatremère, Mém. Hist. et Géogr. i. pp. 308, 309, 327 ff.; Al-Idrisi (trans. Jaubert), i. p. 320.

'Dabik is a town in the neighbourhood of Damietta, which gives its name to the sumptuous robes and the dyed turbans of sharb, and the trimmings of Dabik interwoven with gold. Turbans of sharb, interwoven with gold, were made there; each turban being 100 cubits in length, and bearing designs woven with gold of the value of 500 dinars, without reckoning the price of the silk and the linen thread. These turbans and the rest were brought into fashion in the time of Al-Aziz bi 'llâh, son of Al-Mu'izz, who reigned from the year 365 (A.D. 975) until he died in the month of Sha'bân, in the year 386 (A.D. 996).' Khiyat, i. p. 221.

'There is no brocade in the world with a foundation of linen, of which a single garment, not interwoven with gold, fetches a price of 100 dinars in cash, except the brocade of Tinnîs and Damietta.' Khitâṭ, i. p. 111.

Cf. Quatremère, Mém. i. p. 308, who makes the mistake of translating كتان by 'cotton.' Al-Makrîzî says that the robes made at Tinnîs for the caliph, in which a large quantity of gold was employed, were worth 1,000 dinars a piece; and that the sale of these fabrics at one time brought in a yearly receipt of 20,000 or 30,000 dinars from Al-'Irâk alone. Cf. Al-Idrîsî (trans. Jaubert), i. p. 320.

² I.e. Sicilian tissue. As in many other cases, a name derived from the place where the material was originally manufactured is retained, even when the manufacture is no longer confined to that place. Sikillî was also made in Spain. See Al-Mukaddasî (ed. De Goeje), pp. 150 and 221.

have the gold-mines¹ and the emerald-mines², and red and yellow ochre;

² Quatremère gives an interesting chapter on the emerald-mines of Egypt (Mém. ii. p. 73 ff.) He first quotes an extract from Al-Mâkrîzî (Khiṭat, i. p. 333), who copies however from Al-Mas'ûdî, and Al-Mas'ûdî's informant was 'Abd ar-Rahîm, sometime government clerk at the mines. The mines are said to lie in the midst of a waterless desert at Kharbah, a place seven days' journey to the south-east from Kûs or Kift, the nearest town on the Nile. They are in a mountain range in the territory of the Bajjah, north of the great peak called Karkashandah. Various names are given of the different species of gems obtained, and the estimation in which the several sorts of emerald are held in different countries is stated. Al-Mâkrîzî adds that the mines were regularly worked till about 1358 A.D., when the vizier 'Abd Allâh ibn Zanbûr put a stop to the mining. But it is related that Ibrâhîm Pâshâ, who governed Egypt about the end of the tenth century of the Hegira, in travelling through Upper Egypt, came to a place called 'the well of emeralds,' whence he took a vast number of gems. Prosper Alpinus mentions a well of emeralds, which produced a famous stone belonging to the Grand Seigneur. Maillet states that the situation of the mine is lost: while Bruce (Voyage to the Sources of the Nile, vol. i. p. 229) speaks of a Jebel ez-Zumurrud or Emerald Mountain, which he visited, and where he saw several sinkings or shafts. But as this mountain lay in an island, it cannot be (concludes Quatremère) the emerald-mine which Oriental writers agree in placing on the continent.

So far Quatremère. But the mistake of Bruce, whose island was probably that of Zabargad, led to the rediscovery of the lost mines in 1819 by a French explorer named Cailliaud. The results of his visit were published in a large work by the French Academy; and the ruler of Egypt, Muhammad 'Alî, was so convinced of the value of the mines that he sent a number of miners to work them under Cailliaud's supervision. Cailliaud, however, seems to have spent but a short time at the work, before he was called away to join Ibrâhîm Pâshâ's expedition to the Soudan. From that time provisions ceased to arrive for the colony of miners, who gradually melted away, and the place was once more abandoned. So it remained till 1891, when Mr. Floyer, an Englishman in command of an expedition sent by the Khedive Taufik, once more set foot on Jebel Zabara. For an account of this visit and for many topics of surpassing interest in relation to the desert between the Nile of Upper Egypt and the Red Sea, I refer the reader to M. Floyer's learned and ingenious work, Étude sur le Nord-Elbai (Le Caire, Imprimerie Nationale, 1893).

and marcasite¹ of gold, silver, and copper; and the Lake of Nitre, and

¹ Mr. Fisher, of Oxford, has kindly supplied me with the following note on this mineral:

'The term marcasite is now used by mineralogists for one species of pyrites, but was at one time of wider signification, and synonymous with pyrites in general. It is a compound essentially of iron with sulphur (FeS_2), containing 46.7 per cent. of iron and 53.3 per cent. of sulphur, but the forms found in nature contain other metals such as copper, gold, silver, tin, &c.; arsenic also is commonly present. In colour it varies from a brass-like or golden appearance to a silvery white, and is usually glistening and metallic-looking. "Marcasite of gold" may have reference to its appearance, or to the fact that gold could be extracted from the specimens so named. The synonyms are numerous, e.g. σφίνος, πυρίτης (λιθος), marchasita (Arab.), kis (Germ.) or kies, mundic (English miners), schwefelkies (Germ.), besides xanthopyrites, chalcopyrites. The name marcasite or marchasite is of Spanish or Arabic origin. When weathered by exposure to air and water it produces sulphate of iron (and copper), termed at one time kupferwasser, which is perhaps corrupted into copperas in the vulgar tongue.'

'On account of the large amount of sulphur the mineral is combustible (whence the name pyrites from πῦρ), and gives sparks when struck.'

The word مُرْكَبَةٌ seems to have come into the Arabic from the Syriac جَاهِلِيَّة, which translates the Greek πυρίτης (Bar Bahlûl). The medicinal use of marcasite was borrowed by the Arabs from the Greeks (Dioscorides, ed. Spengel, i. p. 810=v. 142; Galen, opp. t. 13, p. 740; t. 12, p. 199; Pliny, 36, 19, 30, &c.). The Arab Gebr (Jâbir al-Kûfi) gives a chemical analysis of marcasite; see Mangeti, Bib. Chem. i; cf. Wüstenfeld, Gesch. der arab. Aerzte, p. 12 f. Ibn al-Baitâr says: 'Marcasite is sometimes gold, sometimes silver, sometimes copper, sometimes iron: each kind resembles in colour that metal after which it is named; and each kind is mixed with sulphur and gives out sparks when struck' the salt lakes¹. In Egypt is found the clay of Aswân, which is called the 'clay of art,' and of this the jars intended to contain the drink called *fukkâ'â*² are made. The manufacture³ of white paper exists here; factories for boiling sugar⁴ are found here; and presses for sugar-canapes; and fields of rice⁵; and oil of turnip⁶ and radish; and oil of balsam⁷; and opium⁸ and the *abramîs*⁹ and honey-wine.

against iron.' This paragraph is based upon the article by Sadebek and Hoffmann, 'Ueber den Namen Markasit,' in the Neues Jahrbuch für Mineralogie, Stuttgart, 1878, p. 289 ff.

The word 'marcasite' must have come into the other European languages through Latin translations of Arabic medical works, or through the Spanish marcaxita, modern marquesita; see Dozy and Engelmann, Glossaire des mots espagnols et portugais dérivés de l'arabe, p. 301. (A. J. B.)

¹ The salt lakes in the Wâdî Nafrûn or Nitrian Valley, which lie about three days' journey through the desert to the north-west of Cairo, are still a source of revenue to the Egyptian government. There are other salt lakes in the Delta and Upper Egypt. (A. J. B.)

² A kind of beer made of fruit.

⁴ Al-Makrîzî gives an account of the method of cultivating the sugar-cane in Egypt in his time; see Khiṭat, i. p. 1.r. The use of sugar in Egyptian cookery is described by 'Abd al-Laṭîf, Al-Mukhtaṣar, ed. White, pp. 178-182. The sugar-factories of Egypt were very numerous; Ibn Dukmâk, at the end of the fourteenth century, names sixty-five of them in Cairo alone, from many of which the government derived a large revenue; see op. cit. iv. p. 161.

⁵ 'Abd al-Laṭîf says that rice was much used in cookery with meat and fish; op. cit. p. 184. It was introduced into Egypt under the Mahometans.

The Nile.

§ Moreover, the Nile of Egypt is one of the miracles¹⁰, at which the people of the earth marvel when they hear of them; for it rises at the

* 'Abd al-Laṭīf, who was a contemporary of our author, says of the Egyptians: وَخَتَّمُونَ إِنَّمَا بِاسْتِخْرَاجِ دُهْنٍ بِزَرِ الْفَجْلِ وَالسَّلْبِمِ وَاللَّسْ وَيَسْتَعْجِلُونَ بِهِ وَيَعْمَلُونَ مِنْهُ الصَّابِونَ وَمَابُونَمْ رَطِبَ أَحْمَرَ وَأَصْفَرَ وَأَخْضَرَ

'They have a peculiar custom also of extracting oil from the seed of the radish and the turnip and the lettuce, and this oil they burn for light; and they make soap of it also: and their soap is moist, and red, yellow, or green in colour.' ('Abd al-Laṭīf, op. cit., ed. White, p. 176.)

* 'Abd al-Laṭīf also mentions oil of balsam among the products of Egypt, and says that it was only made at 'Ain Shams (Heliopolis) in that country; remarking that no balsam was to be found in his day in Syria, where Galen and Nicolaus say that it grew in the greatest perfection; op. cit. pp. 22–26. See also Butler, Coptic Churches, ii. p. 331. (A. J. B.)

* 'Abd al-Laṭīf says that opium was made from the black poppy (الشَّخَّاشُ) (الأسود) in Upper Egypt, and was often adulterated; op. cit. p. 48.

* The abramīs was a fish found in the Nile. It is curious that our author should place it here among the vegetable products. Al-Idrīsī says that the abramīs has a red tail, is called the king of fish, is very good to eat, and is a hand's breadth in length, and half that measure in thickness; see Jaubert's trans., p. 29. The name of this fish is derived from the Greek ἀβραμίς, which occurs in Oppian's Haleutica, i. 244–7:

χαλκίδες αὐτὸν θρίσσαι τε καὶ ἀβραμίδες φορέονται ἀθρόαι, ἀλλοτε δὲ ἀλλον ἀλλος πόρον, ἢ περὶ πέτρας ἢ πελάγη, δολιχούσι τ' ἐπέδραμον αἰγαλοῖσιν,

God has spoken of the Nile of Egypt by the tongues of his prophets ; for Isaiah the prophet says : ‘ God shall bless the people of Egypt, and those whom his hands created in Al-Mauṣil ¹. ’

Fol. 20 b § The Gospel also says : ‘ The angel of the Lord appeared in a dream, and said : “ Rise, take the child and his mother, and flee into the land of Egypt, and be there until I bring thee word ². ” ’ And the Lord Christ and his mother, the Pure Virgin, and the blameless old man, Joseph, dwelt two years in Egypt.

§ And in the prophecy of Hosea, as the pure Gospel bears witness, it is said : ‘ From Egypt have I called my Son ³. ’

Sojourners in Egypt.

§ That which causes Egypt to excel other countries is the sojourn in this land of our Lord Jesus Christ, in the flesh, with the Pure Lady Mary ⁴, and the truthful old man, Joseph the carpenter, by the command of God ; and also the sojourn at Alexandria of Mark the Evangelist ⁵,

¹ Isaiah xix. 25. Al-Mauṣil, Mosul or Moussol, being opposite the ruins of Nineveh, was often confused with the latter city, and spoken of as ‘ Nineveh.’ Moreover the territory of Al-Mauṣil (أرض الموصل) forms part of what was once the kingdom of Assyria, and so the name was used as synonymous with ‘ Assyria.’ Cf. e.g. Al-Mas’ūdī, Murāj adh-Dhahab (ed. Barbier de Meynard), ii. 77 :—

⁵ The Copts have, as it is well known, unanimously preserved the tradition, who was the nephew of Stephen, the chief of the deacons, and first of the martyrs in Jerusalem.

Some of the pure patriarchs¹ also came into Egypt; namely, Abraham, the Friend of God; and Jacob, the son of Isaac, who lived here seventeen years and died here, and whose body was taken back to Syria; and the fathers of the twelve tribes, who were his sons. The posterity of the latter in Egypt increased to the number of six hundred thousand five hundred and fifty souls², including the descendants of Joseph the Truthful and his sons Manasseh and Ephraim, without³ reckoning the sons of Levi, whose number amounted to twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three souls. Joseph died in Egypt, and his body was carried into Syria; and Moses prayed and worshipped at his prison⁴.

Among those who dwelt in Egypt were Moses, and Aaron his brother, and their sister Miriam. Lot also, the son of Abraham's brother, entered this country; and Joshua the son of Nun; and the Fol. 21 a also found in Greek and Latin ecclesiastical writers, that St. Mark was the founder of the church of Egypt, and the first bishop of Alexandria. The Arabic Lives of the Patriarchs, by Severus of Al-Ushmūnain, begins with an account of the episcopate of St. Mark; see British Museum MS. Or. 26, 100, pp. 16-23. Cf. the old Greek diptychs preserved in MSS. of the Coptic Liturgy of St. Cyril, which give a list of the bishops of Alexandria beginning with St. Mark (επίκοτος τοις ἀγίοις ἀπόστολοις καὶ εὐαγγελιστοῖς ἀρχιεπικοποῖς καὶ εὐαγγελιστοῖς).

Boundaries of Egypt.

§ The furthest point of the land of Egypt on the east is 'Abbâsah³, and on the west Alexandria. Its greatest length is from Al-'Arîsh⁴ to 'Aidhâb⁵,

وَاتَّا دَانِيَالْ فَلَمْ اقْفَدْ نَيْهَ عَلَى اُثْرَ الِّاَنْ وَعَدَهُ اِبْنُ زُولَقْ نَفِينَ وَلَدَ بَصَرَ

'With regard to Daniel I have not, up to the present time, met with any record [of his sojourn in Egypt]; but Ibn Zûlâk counts him among those that were born in Egypt.' (Husn al-Muħādarah, i. p. rr.)

² The lists of distinguished visitors to Egypt given by the Mahometan historians remind us of the similar lists in Diodorus (i. 96). As-Suyûtî gives the names of many Greek philosophers and writers who sojourned in Egypt, among whom are Plato, Hippocrates, Ptolemy, Aratus, Euclid, and Aristotle; see Husn al-Muħādarah, i. p. rr f.

D. 1267 this was the route taken by the pilgrims on their way to Mecca. 'Aidhâb was also a port much frequented by merchants from India and Yemen, until the middle of the fourteenth century and its greatest breadth from Barkah¹ to Ailah². It is said that Barkah is also called 'the Five Cities.'

The City of Fustāt Misr.

§ Account of the city of Misr³. It is related, in the history of the church and the lives of the patriarchs⁴, that 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî, and the Arabs who invaded Egypt with him, took the road from the mountains of our era. M. Amélineau, who speaks as if the Synaxarium and the revenue-list alone preserved the name of this important town, seems to have overlooked Quatremère's account of it, as well as Al-Makrizî's, which proves that 'Aidhâb was existing not only at the end of the fourteenth century, as the revenue-list published by De Sacy shows, but as late as the middle of the fifteenth century, although it was then in a state of decadence, and no more than a village of huts. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch; Al-Makrizî, i. p. 111; Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 49]; Quatremère, Mém. ii. pp. 162-172, where Ibn Haukal and Abû 'l-Fidâ are also cited. M. Amélineau (Geogr. p. 160) would identify 'Aidhâb with Berenice or Myoshormos, the former of which is probably correct, the latter being absolutely out of the question.

² A small town on the shore of the Gulf of Suez, and on the borders of Syria and the Hedjaz. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch i. p. 50; Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 123 f.]; Al-Makrizî, i. p. 110.

⁴ Our author is quoting loosely from the biography of the patriarch Benjamin, in Severus' history of the patriarchs:

فأخذوا للبل حتى وصلوا الى قصر مبني بالحجارة بين الصعيد والريف يسمى بابلون فخريرا

until they reached a fortress, built of stone¹, between Upper Egypt and the Delta², which was called Bâblûn³. Here they pitched their tent, and all of them prepared to meet the Romans and to fight with them. And they called that place 'Al-Fustât' in their language; and the meaning of this word is 'The Tent.' In this way the Arabs called the Fort of Ash-Shama⁴ at Miṣr 'Fustât Bâblûn.'

خَيَّمُوهُنَّ حَتَّى يَرْتَبِعُوا الْمَقَاتِلَةُ الرُّومُ وَمَحَارُّهُمْ ثُمَّ إِنَّهُمْ سَمَوَا ذَلِكَ الْمَوْضِعَ أَعْنَى الْقُصْرِ بِلْفَتِهِمْ
بَابُلُونَ الْفَسْطَاطُ وَهُوَ اسْمُ الْآنِ

'Then [the Arabs] crossed the hills until they arrived at a fort built of stone, between Upper Egypt and the Delta, which was called Bâblûn, and there they pitched their tents, that they might prepare to fight with the Romans. Then they named that place, that is to say the fort, Bâblûn Fustât in their language; and that is its name at the present time.' (Brit. Mus. MS. Or. 26,100, p. 105, lines 12-14.)

² I translate الرِّيفَ by 'the Delta' because that is its obvious meaning here. See note on fol. 12 a.

⁴ In my Coptic Churches (vol. i. chap. 4) I was unable to give any satisfactory account of the name Kâṣr ash-Shama' or 'Castle of the Candle,' which is the familiar designation of the place to-day. Now, however, I am inclined to think that Shama' is a corruption of the old Coptic name χαλεπή, 'Egypt.' The town and fortress of Babylon were called by the Copts ραβλων ḥite χαλεπή or 'Babylon of Egypt.' Thus, in the Acts of the Coptic martyr John of Phanijoit or Zaitûn, we read that the saint resolved to go to ραβλων ḥite χαλεπή, to appear before the Sultan Al-Kâmil (ed. Amélineau, p. 37). χαλεπή is also used by itself to denote Cairo (op. cit. pp. 44, 45, 47, 48). See Quatremère,

§ I found an account of the conquest of Egypt in the Book of Al-Janāh. It says that 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣî conquered Egypt in the year 19¹ of the Hegira. He encamped outside a place called Janān ar-Rīhān, whither the Arabs came down to besiege the city of Miṣr. The bishop of the Romans at Miṣr and Alexandria was named Cyrus². The Fol. 21 b

Mém. i. pp. 49, 50; Champollion, L'Égypte sous les Pharaons, i. p. 184f., ii. p. 110f.
It is further noticeable that the Arabic name, Miṣr, 'Egypt,' is applied both to the capital and to the country. (A. J. B.)

² Cyrus was the Greek patriarch of Alexandria at the time of the Arab invasion of Egypt. He is mentioned in the following passage of Eutychius (Annales, ed. Pococke, ii. p. 266):

وفي اول خلافة صير جيرجيوس بطيريكى على الاسكندرية اقام اربع سنين فلما سمع ان المسلمين غلبوا الروم وفتحوا فلسطين وانهم جائين الى مصر ركب البحر وهرب من الاسكندرية الى القسطنطينية وبقي كرسي الاسكندرية بعده بلا بطرك ملكي سبعة وتسعين سنة ولا هرب صير بعده كورس بطيريكى على الاسكندرية وكان مارونيا على دين هرقل وكان بالاسكندرية رجل راهب يقال له صفرونيس فانكر صفرونيس مقالة كورس البطرك وكان كورس يقول ان سيدنا المسيح طبعتين بمشته واحدة وفعل واحد وقديم واحد وهذه هي مقالة مارون

'At the beginning of the caliphate [of 'Umar] George was appointed patriarch of Alexandria. He remained four years in possession of the see. Then when he heard that the Muslims had conquered the Romans, and had vanquished Palestine, and were advancing upon Egypt, he took ship and fled from Alexandria to Constantinople; and after his time the see of Alexandria remained without a Melkite patriarch for ninety-seven years.

'When George took flight, Cyrus was appointed patriarch of Alexandria in succession to him; Cyrus was a Maronite, and followed the religious faith of [the Emperor] Heraclius. Now there was a monk at Alexandria named Sophronius, who condemned the doctrines of the patriarch Cyrus; for Cyrus taught that Our Lord Christ consisted of Two Natures with One Will and One Energy and One Personality; and this was the doctrine of Maro.'

Cf. Le Quien (Oriens Christ. ii. col. 447 ff.), according to whom Cyrus was elected patriarch in A. D. 632, deposed in 639, restored in 641, and died in 642; and Zotenberg, Chron. de Jean de Nikiou, p. 439.

people of Al-Fustāṭ dug a moat against the Arabs. Al-Fustāṭ was then called Al-Lūnīyah¹; but the Arabs called it Al-Fustāṭ, because they said: ‘This is the tent (fustāṭ) of the people, and their place of meeting.’ Amr, then, came thither with three thousand and five men; but afterwards he was joined by Az-Zubair ibn al-Awwām, with twelve thousand. Amr took possession of the fortress², and captured it by force³; and thereupon he gave up to plunder all the treasures that it contained. He spared the lives of the natives on condition of their becoming a ‘protected people’; but he laid tribute upon them throughout their country. The governor of Al-Lūnīyah, or Al-Fustāṭ, demanded a tax of two dinars from every adult: that is to say twenty-seven dirhems, all but one-third; unless the man was poor. Every rich man was obliged to pay every year two dinars and three ardebs of corn. In this way Amr raised a revenue of two millions of dinars from the poll-tax of Egypt; and ‘Abd Allāh ibn Sa‘id ibn Mufarraj⁴ raised four millions of dinars. The government of Amr ibn al-Āṣi lasted ten years and four months, and that of ‘Abd Allāh⁵ his son for two years.

§ It is also said that, when the Muslims came into Egypt, they made an enclosure of canes, extending from the road called Al-Farr to the place named Daurah Khalf; and hither they assembled themselves; and it was called Al-Fustāṭ, or the meeting-place of the people; and the Arabs did not put up a tent, not being acquainted with the use of tents.

² M. Amélineau, who has published a translation of the greater part of fol. 21 b (Géogr. p. 542), translates حصن by ‘fossé’! He also reads, a line or two further down, ‘Louiiyah’ instead of ‘Lūnīyah,’ not being aware that the latter is simply part of the form بابلونية (Bāblūnīyah), used by Al-Makrīzī for ‘Babylon.’

³ For remarks on the conquest of Egypt, see Introduction.

§ 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣî conquered Egypt on a Friday, on the first day of the month of Al-Muharram, in the year 20 of the Hegira, and in the caliphate of 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭâb, in a battle which took place near the fortress known as the Fort of Al-Hammâm¹. The number of the Copts who inhabited the land of Egypt, without counting the decrepit old men and the children below the age of understanding, amounted to six millions of souls. 'Amr imposed upon all of them a yearly tax² of twenty-six dirhems and two-thirds; but from the rich men, all alike, he exacted two dinars and three ardebs of wheat a head, in every place that he occupied. In this way the country produced twelve millions of dinars, without reckoning the tribute of the Jews in Egypt and its provinces. All this money was carried to 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭâb; and it was the first money that was taken to him from Egypt. 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣî had visited Egypt during the days of ignorance, and knew the roads leading thither, through trading there together with one of the tribe of the Kuraish³.

³ These words are borrowed from Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, who relates that 'Amr went from Arabia to Jerusalem on a trading expedition with some members of the tribe of Kuraish. In Syria, 'Amr was able to render certain services to a Greek deacon of Alexandria, who was visiting Jerusalem on a pilgrimage, and who, in gratitude to 'Amr, invited him, with one of the members of the tribe of Kuraish, to visit Alexandria, where the two Arabs were much struck by the wealth and magnificence of the capital of Roman Egypt. See As-Suyûṭî, Husn al-Muḥādarah, i. p. ٦١; Al-Maḳrîzî, Khitâb, i. p. ١٠٤; Ibn al-Athir, iii. p. ٥٥; Abû 'l-Mahâsin, i. p. ٤.

The words of Al-Maḳrîzî, quoting from Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, are:

وكان عمرو قد دخل في للبامالية مصر وعرف طرقها ورأى كثرة ما فيها وكان سبب دخوله
إياباً أنه قدم إلى بيت المقدس لتجارة في ذفر من قريش

'Amr had visited Egypt during the days of ignorance, and knew the roads leading thither, and had seen the wealth of the country; and the cause of his visit to Egypt was that he travelled to Jerusalem for purposes of trade, with some members of the tribe of Kuraish,' &c.

§ I found it stated in the History of the Church that the Muslims entered Egypt and took possession of it in the month of Ba'ûnah, in the year 321 of the Righteous Martyrs¹.

§ The number of those that were slain in the conquest of Egypt, without reckoning those that were killed during the siege, was twelve thousand three hundred².

§ The places named after the Arab tribes, who laid them out at the time of the conquest of Egypt in Muâharram of the year 20 of the Hegira, were [the streets or quarters named after³] Muâharrah ibn Haidân ibn 'Amr ibn al-Hâf ibn Kuðâ'ah; Tajîb Umm 'Adî; Lakhm

انفذ ملك المسلمين سريّة مع امين من اصحابه يسمى عمر بن العاص في سنة ثلثمائة
وسبعين وخمسين لدیقلادیانوس قاتل الشهداء فنزل عسکر الاسلام الى مصر بقوّة عظيمة في
اليوم الثاني عشر من بوجة دنكتطسر من شهر الرؤم

'The king [i. e. caliph] of the Muslims sent an expedition, under one of his trusted friends named 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî, in the year 357 of Diocletian the slayer of the martyrs ; and the army of Islam invaded Egypt in great force on the 12th day of Ba'ûnah, [that is to say] in the Roman month of December.' (Brit. Mus. MS. Or. 26,100, p. 105, lines 7-10.)

Cf. Renaudot, Hist. Patr. p. 162.

Ba'ûnah does not correspond to December, but to May 26-June 24.

It is well known that the so-called Era of the Martyrs really begins with the accession of Diocletian, A. D. 284 (Aug. 29), and was originally employed by heathens as well as Christians.

² Al-Kindî makes the number of slain only 3,500 ; see Al-Makrîzî, Khiṣâṭ, i. p. ٢٩٣.

³ This passage seems to be somewhat corrupt. Perhaps the copyist did not understand it. It is doubtless borrowed from Al-Kindî's Khiṣâṭ Miṣr. Al-Makrîzî says :

ولما رجع عمرو من الاسكندرية ونزل موضع فسطاط انقضت القبائل بعضها الى بعض
وتنافسوا في الموضع فولى عمرو على لفظ معاوية بن خديج التجيبي وشريك بن سعيد الغطيفي

'When 'Amr returned from Alexandria and settled at the place where his tent (fustāt) had been pitched, the tribes assembled together and divided the place between them. Then 'Amr appointed as stewards of the quarters Mu'āwiyah ibn Khadīj of the tribe of Tajīb, and Sharīk ibn Simī of the tribe of Ghāffī, and 'Amr ibn Kāhzam of the tribe of Khulān, and Haiwīl ibn Nāshirah of the tribe of Maghāfir; and it was these men who appointed settlements for the Arabs and divided the place among the tribes; and this was in the year 21.' (Khiṣāt, i. p. 11v.)

The names of the Arab tribes here furnished by our author as those which laid out the different quarters of Al-Fustāt, and gave their names to them, are also found in Al-Makrīzī (ibid.) and Ibn Dukmāk, iv. p. 1 f., with the addition of others.

² Habīb was one of the companions of Mahomet, shared in his flight, and took part in the conquest of Mecca. Under the caliph 'Uthmān, he retired into the Nitrian valley, which was therefore named after him. Wādī Habīb is the most usual of the names given by the Arabs to the Nitrian valley (see fol. 20 a), which they also called Wādī Naṭrūn, Wādī 'l-Mulūk, Desert of Askīt (Σκύαθις, Scaetus), Desert of Shihāt and Mizān al-Kulūb (Balance of Hearts). Of the last two names the former is simply the Coptic Shihāt (ሸዕዘት), from which Σκύαθις and Askīt are derived, and the latter is an Arabic translation of the two elements of which the Coptic name appeared to be composed, namely ሚን, 'measure,' 'weigh,' and ዘርጥ, 'heart.' See Al-Makrīzī, Khiṣāt, i. p. 181; As-Suyūtī, i. p. 111.

Wardân the Roman¹, the friend of 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî; Shajâ'ah ibn Mandaghân ibn Malik ibn Ka'b ibn al-Hârith ibn Ka'b. The market-place of Barbar² was named after Barbar ibn Abî Habîb. The street of Al-Khadîjî was the settlement of 'Abd ar-Rahmân ibn Mu'âwiyah ibn Khadîj ibn Hâjar, emir of Egypt³ in the caliphate of 'Abd Allâh ibn az-Zubair⁴ at Mecca and of Marwân⁵ in Syria.

§ 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî ibn 'Adî is described as being dark and short, with a large head and prominent brows, wide-mouthed, with a long beard, broad-shouldered and broad-chested⁶. He died in the year 43; and he was buried in the Mukaṭṭam⁷ hills, in the neighbourhood of the Ravine, on the road towards the Hedjaz.

⁴ 'Abd Allâh was the eighth caliph, but was not recognized in Syria and only by a party in Egypt. He reigned 128 days, during the latter part of A. H. 64 and the earlier part of A. H. 65. In the month of Jumâdâ 'l-Ûlâ, A. H. 65, the Omeyyad caliph Marwân invaded Egypt, and fought with 'Abd Allâh and his emir 'Abd ar-Rahmân, whom he defeated and slew, so that the Omeyyad dynasty was established throughout the Mahometan world. King Aftûtîs.

§ I found it written in the history of Maḥbûb¹ ibn Kuṣṭanṭîn Al-Manbâjî (now the city of Manbij² is also called the ancient City of the Priests, and is on the banks of the Euphrates), in the first part, that a king named Aftûtîs³, in the time of Isaac son of Abraham, was the

² The Syriac Mâbûg (مَبْعَج), see Assemani, Bib. Or. ii. p. 22 ; cf. 'Mabog,' Pliny, H. N. v. 19), and the Greek Hierapolis, in northern Syria, to the east of Antioch and not far from the right or western bank of the Euphrates. It is now called Menbij or Benbij, and by the Turks Kara Bambûj or Bugûk Manbij, but is in a ruined state. In the time of our author it was a flourishing city and renowned for its salubrious climate (Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. ad voc.) Eutychius incorrectly identifies it with Megiddo (Annales, i. p. 242). 'The City of the Priests' (مدينة الكهان) is a translation of the Syriac name of the place, مَدِينَةُ كَهَانٍ or كَهَانَةُ مَدِينَةٍ, which the Greeks converted into Hierapolis. This parenthetical passage of our author is based upon the words of Maḥbûb, son of Constantine, himself :

في ذلك الزمان بنت سمررين الملكة بيتاً عظيماً لقيوس الصنم في مدينة على شاطئ الفرات
وأقامت لقيوس من الكهان سبعين رجلاً وسميت تلك المدينة ابولويس [sic] الذي تفسيرها
مدينة الكهان وهي مدينة منبع العقيقة

'At that time [i. e. the period of Jacob] the queen Semiramis built a great temple to Kuyûs the idol in a city on the bank of the Euphrates ; and she appointed seventy men priests to Kuyûs. The name of this city was Hierapolis, the interpretation of which is "City of the Priests," and it is the ancient city of Manbij.' (Bodleian MS. Hunt 4,178, fol. 70 a.)

If it may be conjectured that Kubbûs (قبوس) is the correct reading instead of Kuyûs, the statue referred to may be that of Kombabos, of which we hear in the treatise De Dea Syra ascribed to Lucian, that it stood in the temple of the great goddess in whose honour the temple of Hierapolis was actually erected. Agapius accepts the tradition mentioned in the same treatise that Semiramis was the founder of the temple.

He studied the latter in the books of the Chaldaeans and people of the East, and introduced them into Egypt, besides magic and the art of Fol. 28 a conjuring. At the same time, Sodom and Gomorrah were built; and Babylon¹ also was built upon the river Nile. This king, mentioned above, reigned for thirty-two years.

Revenues of Egypt.

§ Under the administration of Joseph, son of Jacob, the land-tax of Egypt, after the country began to flourish through his enterprise, reached the sum of twenty-four million six hundred thousand dinars². The Pharaoh of the time of Moses drew a revenue of ninety millions of dinars; his name was Al-Walid ibn Muṣ'ab³; and he dug, by the the shortened form Tūṭīs (طوطس), the name of a king whom Al-Makrīzī calls the son of Māliyā, son of Kharābā; see Khitāt, i. p. 11^o.; As-Suyūṭī (Husn al-Muḥḍarāh, i. p. 11) calls Tūṭīs the son of Māliyā, son of Kalkan, son of Khartaba.

¹ For a different account of the foundation of the Egyptian Babylon, see fol. 60 b. The generally accepted story of its origin is given by Strabo, Geogr. xvii. cap. 1, § 30, and Diodorus, i. cap. 56, § 3; cf. Josephus, Ant. Jud. ii. 15. The recently-discovered tablets from Tall al-Amarna show that intimate relations existed between Egypt and Babylon on the Euphrates, at least 1,500 years before our era. (A. J. B.)

² Al-Makrīzī says 97,000,000 dinars, and adds that according to the computation of Ibn Daḥyāh 90,000,000 Pharaonic dinars were equivalent to 270,000,000 dinars of his own time. Ash-Sharif al-Harrānī says that from a Sahidic list translated into Arabic he found that the revenues of Egypt in the time of Joseph amounted to 24,400,000 dinars, thus nearly agreeing with our author. The same figures are given by Al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī al-Asadī. See Al-Makrīzī, Khitāt, i. p. 11.

agency of his officers Kârûn and Hâmân¹, the canal of Sardûs², which has more windings than any other.

The Romans derived a revenue of twenty millions of dinars³ from -- Egypt. The country was placed by Heraclius under the government of George, son of Mennas, the *Mukaukis*⁴, on condition of receiving ¹ Hâmân, the minister of Pharaoh, is mentioned in the Koran, Sûrat al-Kîsâq, v. 5 and 7; al-Ankabût, v. 38; al-Mu'min, v. 25 and 38; and (Kârûn) Korah in al-Kîsâq, v. 76; al-Ankabût, v. 38; and al-Mu'min, v. 25. Korah is represented in the Koran, following the Talmud, as a man of immense wealth, and insolent towards his fellow-countrymen.

² Our author is doubtless borrowing from Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, who says that Haman was commanded by Pharaoh to dig this canal, and that the people of the villages in whose neighbourhood it was to run offered him money if he would allow the canal to be brought close to them, which could only be effected by its making many turnings; see Al-Mâkrîzî, Khiṣâq, i. p. v. f.; As-Suyûṭî, i. p. 10. Quatremère identified the so-called canal of Sardûs with the ancient Tanitic branch of the Nile, now named the Bahî Mu'izz (Mém. i. 301).

³ It is impossible to conjecture on what these figures are based. Very probably the population was about eight millions, and there is nothing improbable in the statement of Abû Shâlih, which would give 2½ dinars per head, or £1 5s. od. of our money. But the Roman revenues were in kind as well as in money. Herodotus (iii. 91) makes the revenue from Egypt and parts adjoining, including Barca and Cyrene, 700 talents of silver, without counting the income from the fishery of Lake Moeris, and 700 talents in coined money. St. Jerome, on Daniel xi. 5, says that Ptolemy Philadelphus derived from the countries under his sway 14,800 Egyptian talents, besides 7,000,000 bushels of corn. Towards the end of the Lagide dynasty, the revenue of Auletes was 6,000 talents, though Cicero puts the amount at 12,500; but even this would be only about £2,250,000 as against Abû Shâlih's £10,000,000. In the time of Augustus, the amount of corn sent by Egypt to Rome was nearly 3,000,000 quarters per annum, and if the value of this were included, a near approach would be made to Abû Shâlih's figures. See 'Abd Allâh Simaika's Province Romaine d'Égypte, p. 129 seq. (A. J. B.)

a sum of eighteen millions of dinars yearly. 'Amr ibn al-'Âsî drew, in the year 20 of the Hegira, one million of dinars; but in the year 22, twelve millions. Under the Abbasides, when Egypt was administered by Aḥmad ibn Tūlūn, it produced five millions; and, when administered by Ya'kūb ibn Yūsuf, four millions; and it finally went down to three millions¹.

§ A survey of the provinces of Egypt, so far as the Nile waters them, was made in the days of Hishām² ibn 'Abd al-Malik, and their extent found to be thirty millions of feddâns³. The annual revenue also of Egypt and its dependencies, during the government of Kāfūr in his article Der Mukaukis von Aegypten in the Mittheilungen aus der Sammlung der Papyrus Erzherzog Rainer, vol. i. pp. 1-11. The latter authority concludes that the full designation of the Mukaukis was probably Georgios son of Menas (Mennas) Parkabios, according to the Coptic custom of double names, thus explaining the name Farkab (فرقب for فرقب) given to his father by Yākūt, Al-Makrifī, and As-Suyūṭī; and that his office was probably that of Pagarch, which corresponded to the more ancient office of Nomarch, with, perhaps, the post of Strategos held in addition. Strategos is found in the papyri translated into Arabic by مالٰي الراج or عامل المروءة, and Pagarchos by عامل على الراج or simply عامل; and Eutychius calls the Mukaukis عامل على الراج, while As-Suyūṭī says that he was chief military officer as well as superintendent of the taxes. The term Mukaukis itself is believed by Prof. Karabacek to be the Greek μεγαυχής (v. Aeschylus, Persae, 641), an honorary epithet which would be analogous to μεγαλοπρεπέστατος, ἑνδοξόρατος and εὐλεέστατος, found in papyri of the time of the Mahometan conquest and later as applied to the Pagarchs. ² The tenth of the Omeyyad caliphs; reigned from A. H. 105=A. D. 724 to A. H. 125=A. D. 744.

al-Ustâdh al-Ikhshîdî, was added up, so far as it could be estimated, together with all the expenses, and it amounted to three million two hundred thousand and more than seventy thousand dinars; but the expenditure exceeded the revenue by two hundred thousand dinars. Fol. 23 b

In the year 162 (A.D. 779), in the caliphate of Al-Mahdi ibn al-Mansûr¹, the Abbaside, the revenue of Egypt was estimated at one million eight hundred and twenty-eight thousand five hundred dinars.

Nebuchadnezzar.

§ Nebuchadnezzar², the satrap of the east, invaded Egypt, and ruthlessly pillaged the country for booty. Belteshazzar³ however, his son, restored Egypt after its devastation, which lasted forty years⁴; and the first district which he restored in the country was that of Al-Ushmânain⁵.

¹ The third of the Abbaside caliphs; reigned at Bagdad from A. H. 158=A. D. 775 to A. H. 169=A. D. 786.

² A very distinct tradition has been preserved in Egypt of its invasion by Nebuchadnezzar, spoken of by Jeremiah (xlivi. 16 ff. and xlvi. 13 ff.) and by Ezekiel (xxix. 19). See As-Suyûtî, i. p. ۱۴ f.; Al-Makrîzî, i. p. ۱۸۹, &c.; Eutychius, i. p. 253. It is well known that there exist fragments of a cuneiform inscription of the date of Nebuchadnezzar, which contained an account of his invasion of Egypt; see Schrader, Keilinschrifliche Bibliothek, iii. pt. 2, p. 140 f.

³ Belshazzar. Eutychius writes the name بلشازر; At-Tabârî بلشمر, and Ibn Khaldûn بلشمر.

'From the time of Ananias (Annianus), who was appointed patriarch of Alexandria by Mark the Evangelist, until Demetrius the eleventh patriarch of Alexandria, there were no bishops in Egypt, and the predecessors of the last-named patriarch appointed none. But when Demetrius became patriarch, he appointed three bishops, and he was the first patriarch of Alexandria who made bishops. When he died, Heraclius was constituted patriarch of Alexandria after him, and appointed twenty bishops.' (Annales, ii. p. 330.)

The assertion of Eutychius is contradicted by the patriarchal history of Severus of Al-Ushmûnain, which not only states that St. Mark himself consecrated Annianus (أبا يونس) bishop of Alexandria, and left him there in that capacity during his sojourn in Pentapolis, but also mentions bishops in Egypt, other than the patriarch, in the lives of Avilius (أليانوس) the third patriarch, of Celadion (كلاديانوس) the ninth, and of Julian (وليانوس) the eleventh; see Brit. Mus. MS. Or. 26,100, p. 21, line 18; p. 24, line 5; p. 25, lines 9 and 19. I use the word 'patriarch' here as being that employed by Severus.

'When they understood the discourse of the wâli, and his care for the affairs of the churches, Anbâ Michael, bishop of Miṣr, said : Now is the time for us to take measures for the restoration of the churches, since it is evident that the wâlî bears an affection towards the Christians. Next day, therefore, the patriarch returned to the wâlî, who saluted him, and showed respect to him, and honoured him, and raised him from the ground, and made him sit beside him, and discoursed with him, saying : I told thee yesterday that I would perform whatever thou requirest, but thou hast asked nothing of me ; now, therefore, mention to me whatever thou needest, and it shall be done because of my love for thee. So the patriarch answered with soft words : May the Lord preserve thy days and increase thy dignity and authority ! Thou knowest that thy servant has not been set as ruler over revenues and taxes, but over souls and churches ; and I beseech thy greatness —for we have here churches, some of which have been destroyed by the unrighteous one before thy coming to Egypt, therefore the Lord destroyed his houses and cut off his life from the face of the earth—but if it seems good to thee to command us to rebuild these churches, so that we may pray in them and intercede for thy greatness, the matter rests with thee. Then God quickly put it into the heart of the wâlî that he should order the restoration of those churches ; and all the churches in Fustāt Miṣr were rebuilt.' (Bib. Nat. Paris MS. *Anc. destroyed in the patriarchate of Anbâ John¹, the forty-eighth in the succession.

§ The city of Miṣr, outside which is Madīnat ash-Shams², was founded by Mizraim, the son of Canaan, the son of Ham, the son of Noah, the son of Lamech the Blind, and it was called after the name of the king of the Egyptians, Mizraim. Beyond Egypt is the district between the two rocks, beyond Al-'Arîsh.

Churches of Al-Fustât.

The first church built in Fustât Miṣr was that which is beyond Al-Ḳanṭarah³; it was built in the time of Maslāmah ibn Mukhallaḍ al-Anṣārī⁴. The name of Miṣr in Greek is *Zibt*⁵; and in Frankish Roman⁶ it is Babylon the Fortress. The church above mentioned was in the ² Or 'Ain Shams: the Coptic ωη or ΠΕΤΦΡΗ, the Hebrew On (וֹן) or Beth Shemesh (בֵּית שְׁמֶשׁ) Jer. xlivi. 13), the classical Heliopolis, a few miles to the north of modern Cairo. The only remaining vestige of the famous city is the obelisk which stands near the village of Maṭarīyah. See Al-Makrīzī, i. p. 11; Yākūt, Geogr. Wörter i. p. 111; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 287.

Babylon, as the name of Fustât, or Fustât and Cairo together, was widely employed in Europe at the time of our author and later; see Mandeville's travels, edition of London, 1568, fol. ciiii verso: 'And who so wyll go through the land of Babylon wher the Soudan dwelleth . . . hee quarter, between Cairo and Miṣr¹, running from the church of Saint George, called Al-Hamrâ. The church was in the middle of this quarter, which is also called Ḥârat ar-Rûm², and was inhabited by Christians and Abyssinian monks and others. When the quarter was demolished, as the others also were demolished outside Miṣr, and the houses which it contained were destroyed, the bricks and timber were carried off for other buildings in Cairo. A few ruined houses, however, remained, and were inhabited by the men of Maimûn³. ? } } Fol. 24 a

The church of Saint George, called Al-Hamrâ, had fallen into ruin and disorder; but Al-Mu'allim Sarûr Al-Jullâl undertook to improve and renew it in the caliphate of Al-Mustansîr. The said Al-Jullâl was full of wealth and honours. Thus when our lord Al-Mustansîr went up to the manzarah called As-Sukkarah⁴ for the breaking of the dam of the canal¹ dug by 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî, emir of Egypt, in the caliphate of the Prince of the Faithful, 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭâb, the Mu'allim Sarûr al-Jullâl offered to the caliph handsome gifts, consisting of different kinds of food and drinks and sweetmeats, and prepared for him many kinds of fresh fish and sugar in varied forms; and the caliph accepted them from him, and gave him a robe of honour, and granted his requests, and sent him to Al-Kulzum², which is a fortress built to protect the country on the side of the Hedjaz; and the name of the place is derived from the weaver's cord, with which a garment is held fast, and which is called *kulzum*³. Jauhar al-Mu'izzî⁴ built a bridge⁵ over that canal, leading to Fol. 24 b the bank of Al-Mâksam. Here is the watercourse called Al-Majnûnah⁶. Before this bridge, there was a bridge which was destroyed; but traces of it are left on the east side, and part of it on the west side, below the garden, near the road constructed from thence to Az-Zuhri, for carrying provisions to the canal which runs from Cairo to Al-Kulzum, that they may be taken thence to Mecca and Medina, and also to the region

¹ The famous Khalij or canal of Cairo, sometimes called Khalij Amîr al-Mu'mînîn, or 'Canal of the Prince of the Faithful,' after 'Umar, the first who assumed that title. It runs from the Nile at Al-Fustât northwards to Bastâh (Zagâzig), whence it turned eastwards and terminated in the Red Sea, near Al-Kulzum. Its original purpose was to furnish Mecca and Medina with provisions from Egypt. The Khalij now only serves to convey water to the city of Cairo, and terminates at Matariyah, near the site of 'Ain Shams or Heliopolis. In constructing this canal, 'Amr had only to avail himself of and render navigable the very ancient Amnis Trajanus. of Al-'Abbāsah. Our lord Al-Mustanṣir was crowned with the jewelled turban and the canopy was spread over him, and he was * * *¹ sitting on the daīs of state, and the aforesaid Sarūr came out to wait upon him, and the caliph saluted him ; and Sarūr wore a garment of Nasāfīt, and a turban of Şikillīt, bound round the middle with a band of Dabīkīt, interwoven with gold ; and he was summoned by name on both occasions, when he went up [to Al-Kulzum], and when he returned to Cairo—I mean this Mu'allim Sarūr al-Jullāl.

§ Sarūr was full of benevolence and virtue and usefulness to other men : to each according to his needs. For himself he provided a tomb, roofed with a cupola, and consisting of a vault under ground, contiguous to the apse² of the church. His son, Najāḥ, built over it a church, named after Saint John the Baptist, which was entirely of solid timber, decorated with carving.

§ The church of John the Baptist was restored by the Shaikh As-Sa'īd Abū 'l-Fakhr, father of An-Najīb Abū 'l-Barakāt, known as Ibn Ṣā'īd ; and it was consecrated in the month of Tūt³, in the year 897 of the Blameless Martyrs (A.D. 1180). The Shaikh al-Wajīh Abū 'l-Hasan ibn al-Amāḥh, the scribe, provided for the improvement of the churches attached to the Great Church, in the year 892 (A.D. 1176) of the Blameless Martyrs.

of the Prince of the Faithful¹, upon the invasion of the king of the Franks, on account of the victory gained over them during the year 559² (A.D. 1164). The Ghuzz and the Kurds attacked this church, with the mob of Cairo, and it was burnt with fire³, and rased to the ground like the other churches, in the month of Jumâdâ the First in the year 559

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم ضرب هذا الدينار بالقاهرة سنة احد وسبعين وخمسة لا الا الا
الله وحده لا شريك له ابو محمد المستنفي باامر الله امير المؤمنين محمد رسول الله ارسله بالهدي
ودين الحق ليظهره على الدين كلة ولو كره المشركون صلى الله عليه وعلى الله وعلى الملك غاية
الناصر يوسف بن ابيو

'In the name of God the compassionate and merciful. This dinar was struck at Cairo in the year 571. There is no deity but God alone; he has no partner. Abû Muhammâd. Al-Mustâdî bi-amri 'llâh is Prince of the Faithful. Mahomet is the Apostle of God, who sent him under his guidance with the true religion, that he might reveal it above all religion, even if the polytheists are indignant thereat; may God bless him and his family and the most Victorious Prince Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb.' (Poole, Brit. Mus. Cat. of Or. Coins, iv. p. 63.)

Silver dirhems of Damascus, A. H. 573, have the following superscription :

الامام المستنفي باامر الله امير المؤمنين لا الا الله وحده محمد رسول الله الملك الناصر
صلاح الدنيا والدين يوسف بن ابيو
&c.

'Al-Imâm Al-Mustâdî bi-amri 'llâh, Prince of the Faithful. There is no deity but God alone. Mahomet is the Apostle of God. Al-Malik an-Nâṣir Shâlâh ad-Dunyâ wad-Dîn Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb, &c.' (Ibid.)

From these inscriptions it does not appear that Saladin (Al-Malik an-Nâṣir, &c.) was actually called 'Partner' of the caliph al-Mustâdî, Prince of the Faithful, upon the coins; but that he was named upon them as if he were his partner.

The dirhem was a silver coin about forty-five grains in weight.

(A.D. 1164). Afterwards it was restored, in the year 560, and the excellent Shaikh Abû 'l-Fakhr undertook its rebuilding. He had been scribe for religious matters in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiẓ; and he was assisted in this act of restoration by the distinguished Shaikh, Abû Hasan ibn al-Amâḥh, in the year 892 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1176). After this, all the churches that had been wrecked were restored by the following shaikhs and chief men: the Shaikh As-Šâ'id Shâdîd al-Mulk ibn al-Fakhr ibn Busaiwah, and Abû 'l-Barakât his son, and Al-As'ad Abû 'l-Khair Jirjah ibn Wahab, known as Ibn Fol. 25 b al-Mîkât. The restored churches were consecrated, by the help of God; and prayers and liturgies have been offered in them up to this day.

§ When the restoration took place, and when this great church—I mean Al-Hamrâ—was put into order, then the envious and the contentious were indignant because it had been erected anew; and they incited the common people to assist them, and they pillaged the church, and it was destroyed a second time. Afterwards the property of the church that had been scattered was restored, and a fresh consecration took place, and the liturgy and prayers were offered according to the customary practice.

§ The tomb of Al-Mu'allim Sarûr al-Jullâl, which has been mentioned before, remains in this church to the present day¹. In this church there is also a tank, and a well of running water.

§ The aforesaid Al-As'ad Abû 'l-Khair ibn al-Mîkât was sent for by Shâwar the vizier, who was indignant with him without just cause; and began to subject him to tortures. So he died a martyr. His body was carried to this church and buried here. May the Lord grant rest to his pure soul! He was laid in the northern porch. Outside this church and near it there is a Christian burying-ground.

§ Near the above-mentioned church of John the Baptist, there was

From the roof of this church a view is obtained of the Pool of Kârûn³. The view from this church is agreeable, on account of the gardens and pleasure-grounds and handsome buildings which surround it. It is spacious and pleasant during both the high Nile and the seed time, and there are many people in the gardens and pavilions which surround it.

Among those who at any time have attacked this church there was a body of blacks, called the Juyûshîyah⁴, who grew insolent and violent, and whose hands were stretched out until they stopped the roads and seized the money of travellers, or shed their blood. When the Ghuzz and the Kurds obtained possession of Egypt, in Rabi' the Second of the year A.H. 564 (A.D. 1169), a body of Armenian Christians overcame the blacks, and drove them away and killed many of them ; and the quarter which they inhabited was left deserted : it was in the neighbourhood of Al-Hamrâ, as it has already been said. The quarter was bought by Hâtalbâ the Ghuzzî, wâli of Cairo, from the Divan ; and he ploughed it, and made wells and waterwheels, and laid it out in gardens,

Fol. 26 b and sowed seeds of many plants, and was the first to make the ground green with vegetation. The entrance to the church was altered, since there was no door in this street, but it was at the side, in the road mentioned.

Population of Egypt.

§ The book of *Fadd'il Misr*¹ relates that Al-Walid ibn Zuwā'ah was set over the taxes of Egypt, in the caliphate of Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Aḥwal, and went to number the population, and stayed six months in Upper Egypt, and in Lower Egypt three months. He counted more than ten thousand villages; and in the smallest of the villages there were five hundred male Copts; and the total number of the Copts was five millions of souls.

The Nile.

§ The learned are all agreed that there is not in the world a river of greater length than the Nile². For its course through the land of the Muslims amounts to more than a month's journey; and its course through Nubia to two months' journey; and for a journey of four months it flows through uninhabited deserts, until the source is reached in the Mountains of the Moon, to the south of the Equator³. Fluegel, i. pp. 602-3. Ptolemy says (Geogr. bk. iv. c. viii) that to the west of the Anthropophagous Aethiopians lie the Mountains of the Moon, from which the melted snows flow into the lakes which form the sources of the Nile, and these mountains extend from long. 57°, lat. 12° S. to long. 67°, lat. 12° S.

Ibn al-Fakīh al-Hamadānī says in the Kitāb al-Buldān, which he wrote about A.H. 290=A.D. 903, that the Nile comes from two lakes beyond the equator, called Buhairat al-n-Nīl (ed. De Goeje, p. 11).

§ In the aforesaid quarter² there is a church dedicated to the Angel Gabriel, which was restored by Ṣu'lūk al-Jullāl. Above it there is a church named after the Nativity of our Lord Jesus Christ in the Flesh. The cupola over the sanctuary of the church is very lofty, and is conspicuous from a distance; it was erected by the brother 'Abd al-Masīḥ. The Ghuzz and the people of Cairo pillaged it, and broke the pillars of the apostles³, and part of the roof was burnt. In conse-

'Abd al-Latīf says that the sources of the Nile are springs which rise in the Mountains of the Moon, eleven degrees beyond the equator (ed. White, p. 4); and Al-Idrīṣī says sixteen degrees (ed. Rome, p. 19). (A. J. B.)

¹ The Red Sea was looked upon as a branch of the Indian Ocean or China Sea; cf. fol. 19 b. The Marāqid al-Itqād' says:

بَحْرُ الْقَلْنَمِ شَبَّةً مِنْ بَحْرِ الْهَنْدِ

'The Sea of Al-Kulzum is a branch of the Indian Sea.'

Our author means, of course, that the Nile was connected with the Red Sea by means of the canal of Cairo (Khālit' Amīr al-Mu'mīnīn). (A. J. B.)

quence of this, the restoration of the church was undertaken by the Shaikh Ath-Thikāh Gabriel, the scribe, in the caliphate of Al-Ādīd; and it was consecrated afresh, and the liturgy was celebrated in it. Now at this church there was a lotus-tree¹ of large size and well proportioned, which grew as high as the roof of the church; this tree was cut down and sold for a considerable price, and the money was spent upon the rebuilding of the fabric.

Besides this, there is a fourth church, large, and contiguous to the others; surrounded by a wall of sun-dried bricks; with a separate door leading into it. It is among gardens and pleasure-grounds, and commands a view of the canal. When Mīṣr was burnt, in the month of Ṣafar, in the year 564, this church was pillaged and part of the walls was thrown down, and not a single Christian was found at the time to undertake its restoration; so that it has remained to this day in suspense between hope of revival and the prospect of utter ruin. The wall of the aforesaid fourth church was destroyed and levelled with the ground; and the church was profaned through the destruction of its wall, and became contiguous to the road, and was united with a pavilion in the garden, known as *Duwairah Ṣandal*². Part of the roof also disappeared, namely the timber above the sanctuary; therefore the Shaikh Al-Jullāl Ibrāhīm undertook to restore it, with the help of some of the chief men. They put part of the church into order; and the liturgy was celebrated in it on one occasion. Part of it, however, remained neglected, but it continued to be visited twice or three times in the year. The partial restoration was carried out with much care and labour on the part of the tenants of the neighbouring garden; and it was completed on the 26th of Ba'ûnah¹. It was arranged so that it no longer remained possible for men and women to enter the church from the garden, as they had been able to do on account of the union of the ground, which had formerly been within the enclosure of the church, with the garden. In the year 903 of the Martyrs (. . . . 910) the church was improved by the Shaikh Abû Sa'id ibn Andûnah, the financial secretary of the Divan and chief notary, who rebuilt that which had been thrown down, and completed the dome, and whitewashed it. The consecration was performed by Anbâ Gabriel, bishop of Miṣr, in the presence of a body of bishops, priests, and deacons, of the chief men and of the orthodox laity of Miṣr and Cairo. The liturgy was established in the church for every festival and every Sunday and the night² of Sunday. The aforesaid Shaikh Abû Sa'id was present at all times in this church with a body of priests and deacons of the sons of the chief men; at all the festivals, and at the night and day services of Sunday. He also bought the courtyard in front of the church, and opened a road to it from the canal. Now the church returned to its proper condition; and a body of monks took up their abode there. The shaikh provided for the church and for them. Now a congregation of priests and deacons and Christian laity again began to visit the church every Sunday. All this took place in the patriarchate of Anbâ John³, the seventy-fourth in the order of succession.

In the same street there is also a church of the Melkites. There were five churches in this street, from one of which a procession issues on Palm Sunday, and goes up to Cairo. The Ghuzz and Kurds took possession of four of the churches [of the Melkites], robbed them of their timber, and threw down their walls, so that they were level with the ground, on account of the weakness and small numbers of the Melkites; but one church of theirs remained, near the church of Saint George of the Copts in this quarter¹.

Sayings of Mahomet with regard to the Copts.

§ The Book of *Fadhl'î Misr*⁴ states, among its narratives, that the Copts of Egypt are related by affinity to Abraham, the Friend of God⁵, and to Joseph the Truthful⁶; and the chain of this tradition starts from

⁶ Through Asenath, daughter of Potipherah, priest of On. As-Suyûti says:
قال ابن عبد لكم حدثنا عمر بن صالح أخبرنا مروانى القصاص قال صاهر الى القبط من الانبياء ثلاثة ابراهيم . . . تسرى هاجر ويوسف . . . تزوج بنت صاحب عين شمس رسول الله . . . تسرى مارية

'Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam says: 'Umar ibn Salih informed us that he had learnt from Marwânî al-Kassâs that three of the prophets were connected with the Copts by affinity; for Abraham had Hagar as his concubine; and Joseph married the daughter of the chief [priest] of 'Ain Shams [i. e. On or Heliopolis]; and the Apostle of God had Mary as his concubine.' (Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. v.)

the companions of Mahomet. Ashhab ibn 'Abd al-'Azîz¹ said: 'When you conquer Egypt take charge [of the inhabitants], for truly they may claim your protection, and kinship with you !' Ismâ'il² ibn 'Abbâs said, quoting from Ashhab: 'Take charge of the Copts of Egypt, for you will find among them useful auxiliaries against your enemy.' Abû Salimah³ said: 'Mahomet at his death said, "I charge you to drive away the Jews from the Arabian peninsula⁴." Then he added:

¹ Ashhab ibn 'Abd al-'Azîz is the authority quoted by Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam in his Futûh Misr, from which our author borrows the whole of this passage. Ashhab is said to have derived the tradition from Mâlik ibn Anas, who quoted Ibn Shahâb, who quoted 'Abd ar-Rahmân ibn Ka'b, who quoted his father, who heard the words of the 'Apostle of God.' See As-Suyûfi, Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. ۵. Cf. Ibn Hishâm, Sîrah Muhammadi, i. p. ۵, and Abû 'l-Mahâsin, i. p. ۱۰.

² As-Suyûfi's words are :

واخرج ابن عبد لكم عن مسلم بن يسار ان رسول الله . . . قال استوصوا بالقبط خيراً فانكم ستجدونهم نعم الاعوان على قتال عدوكم

'Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam quotes from Muslim ibn Yusâr to the effect that the Apostle of God said: Take charge of the Copts, for you will find them excellent auxiliaries in fighting your enemy.' (Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. ۱.)

³ This is a mistake of the author or his copyist for Umm Salimah, the name of one of Mahomet's wives. As-Suyûfi says:

واخرج الطبراني في الكبير وابن نعيم في دلائل النبوة بسند صحيح عن ام سلمة ان رسول الله . . . اوصى عند وفاته فقال الله الله في قبط مصر فانكم ستظاهرون عليهم ويكونون لكم عدة واعواناً في سبيل الله

'At-Tabarâni in Al-Kabîr and Abû Na'îm in Dalâ'il an-Nabî'a quote, according to a genuine chain of tradition, from Umm Salimah to the effect that the Apostle of God . . . , at the time of his death, charged them, saying: God ! God is with the Copts of Egypt; for you shall conquer them, and they shall be for you an increase of numbers and a body of auxiliaries in the path of God.' (Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. ۱.)

باب اخراج اليهود من جزيرة العرب

"God! God commits the Copts of Egypt to your charge ; for you shall rule over them, and they shall be to you an increase of numbers, and a body of auxiliaries in the path of God." He said also¹: "Take charge of the men with curling hair, the Copts of Egypt, for truly they are your uncles and kinsmen, and your auxiliaries against your enemy, and your helpers in your religion." Then some one said to him : "But how shall they help us in our religion?" To which he replied : "They shall relieve you of the affairs of this world², so that you may be at leisure for religious worship." According to the tradition handed down from 'Abd Allâh ibn 'Amr ibn al-'Âsî, Mahomet said³: 'The Copts

أخرج ابن عبد الحكم عن موسى بن أبي أيوب البافعى عن رجل من المربد ان رسول الله ... مرض فاغنى عليه ثم افاق فقال استوصوا بالادم للجعد ثم اغنى عليه الثانية ثم افاق فقال مثل ذلك ثم اغنى عليه الثالثة فقال مثل ذلك فقال القوم اوصاء لنا رسول الله ... من الادم للجعد فافق فسألوه فقال قبط مصر فانهم اخوال واصهار وهم اعوانكم على عدوكم واعوانكم على دينكم فقالوا كيف يكونون اعواناً على ديننا يا رسول الله فقال يكثرون اعمال الدنيا وتتفرغون للعبادة

'Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam quotes from Mûsa ibn Abî Ayyûb al-Yâfaî, who reports the words of a man of the tribe of Al-Marbad to the effect that the Apostle of God . . . fell sick and swooned, and when he recovered, he said : Take charge of the men with curling hair. Then he swooned a second time, and when he recovered said the same words. Again he swooned for the third time, and said the same words. So the bystanders said : The Apostle of God commits to our charge the men with curling hair ; and when he recovered they asked him his meaning. So he said : The Copts of Egypt are our uncles and our brothers-in-law, and they shall be your auxiliaries against your enemy and on behalf of your religion. Then they said : How shall they help us in our religion, O Apostle of God ? Then he answered : They shall relieve you of the affairs of this world, so that you shall be at leisure for religious worship,' &c. (Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. v.)

³ Abû 'l-Mahâsin quotes the following among the 'sayings of the Prophet with regard to Egypt':

Fol. 29 a are the noblest of foreigners ; the gentlest of them in action ; the most excellent of them in character, and the nearest of them in kinship to the Arabs generally, and to the tribe of Kuraish in particular.' Mahomet also said emphatically¹ : 'God ! God is among the protected people, the people of the desert, the blacks, the men with curling hair². They are related [to the Arabs] and akin to them, in distinction from all the other protected peoples.'

Mission from Mahomet to the Muḳaukis.

Mahomet sent Ḥāṭib³ ibn Abī Balṭā'ah, of the tribe of Lakhm, to the Muḳaukis, governor of Alexandria, to urge him to adopt the religion

قال عبد الله بن عمرو بن العاص ... أهل مصر أكرم الاعجم كلها واسمح لهم يداً وافصلهم

'Abd Allāh ibn 'Amr ibn al-Āṣi says : The people of Egypt are the noblest of all foreigners ; the gentlest of them in action, the most excellent of them in character, and the nearest of them in race to the Arabs generally and to the Kuraish in particular,' i. p. ۲۲.

حدثنا عبد الله بن وهب عن عبد الله بن لهيعة عن عمر مولى غفرة ان رسول الله قال
الله الله في اهل الذمة اهل المدرة السوداء السجن للجعاد فان لهم نسباً وصبراً

'Abd Allāh ibn Wahb informed us, quoting from 'Abd Allāh ibn Lahī'ah, who reported the words of 'Umar the freedman of Ghufrah, that the Apostle of God said : God ! God is among the protected people, the natives of the black soil, the dark-coloured people, the people with curling hair,' i. p. ۱۰.

² It is said to have been the curling hair of Mary the Coptic maiden which attracted the admiration of Mahomet.

of Islam ; but he did not do so. Hâṭib, when he returned to Mahomet, brought him as a gift four maidens, among whom was Mary¹ the Copt, and Sîrîn, her sister, and his mule Duldul², and his ass Ya'sûr, and a purse of money, and a eunuch³ whom the Muḳauķis also sent with them. Mary became the mother of Ibrâhîm⁴. Her sister Sîrîn was given by Mahomet to Hâssân⁵, the poet, and she became the mother of 'Abd ar-Râhmân, his son.

The Three Hamrâs.

§ Section in which are mentioned the three great Ḥamrâs⁶, which are Al-Kuswâ, Al-Wustâ, and Al-Ḥamrâ ad-Dunyâ. According to the Khiṭâṭ of Al-Kindî, in a copy of the Futûḥ Miṣr, the Ḥamrâ were a people of the Romans, among whom were the Banû Nabîh and the Banû 'l-Azraq and the Banû Rûbil ; or, perhaps, a people of the Persians ; and 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣi named them Al-Ḥamrâ, because they were not Arabs, and had become Christians.

² This is said to have been the first mule seen in Arabia ; see Ibn al-Athîr, ii. p. ٢٣٤.

³ The eunuch's name was Ma'bûr ; see Ibn al-Athîr, ii. p. ٢٣٥.

⁴ Ibrâhîm, the son of Mahomet and Mary the Copt, lived to the age of fifteen months, and died in A.H. 10=A.D. 631, so that Fâṭimah was the only child of Mahomet who survived him.

⁵ Hâssân ibn Thâbit died at Madînah A.H. 54=A.D. 674 ; see An-Nawawî, Tahdhîb al-Asmâ, p. ٢٢٦.

Fol. 29 b The Ḥamrā al-Wustā, which is known as Al-Ḳantarah¹, is the place where the Red Standard stood at the time of the conquest of Miṣr by the Arabs; and around it were gathered those who asked protection [of the Muslims], and marched in their rear-guard. On this account the place was called Al-Hamrā².

Monastery and Church of Saint Mennas.

§ The monastery³ named after the martyr Mennas⁴, the owner of the three crowns⁵, which came down to him from heaven, who was a native

³ Between Al-Fustāṭ and Cairo, in the Ḥamrā, which was afterwards called Kanāṭir as-Sabā'. A church and monastery of Abū Mīnā are still existing, but better known to-day as Mārī Mīnā. They are fully described in Coptic Churches, i. p. 47; and in ii. p. 362 a brief legend is given, identifying the saint with the church at Maryūt. Under the Sultan An-Nāṣir Muḥammad ibn Kalā'ūn, the monastery and church of Abū Mīnā were wrecked; but they have since been restored; see Al-Makrīzī, Khiṭāṭ, ii. p. 511. (A. J. B.)

⁴ The festival of St. Mennas is kept by the Copts on Hatūr 15=Nov. 11, and by the Roman Church on the same day. It is said that his father was a native of Nakŷūs, but was appointed governor of the province of Africa. Under Diocletian, Mennas, who was then serving in the army, was beheaded on account of his attachment to the Christian religion, and was buried near Lake Mareotis. See Bib. Nat. MS. Arabe 256 (Synaxarium), ff. 53 b–54 b. Amélineau, Actes des MM. de l'Église copte, p. 88 ff.; Eutychius, Annales, i. p. 402. St. Mennas is represented in Coptic paintings accompanied by camels, because some beasts from the sea like camels prevented his body from being carried away from the spot where it was destined to be buried, and when the body was laid on the back of three camels in succession, each refused to move in spite of blows; see Synaxarium.

of Nakŷūs¹, and whose pure body is buried in the church² at Maryūt³, was restored in the caliphate of Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik ibn Marwan, when Al-Walid ibn Rufā'ah was wālī, at the expense of all the Christians who lived in that quarter, in A.H. 106 (A.D. 725). This was after the conflict with the Arabs, when the Christians complained to the wālī that their women and children were not secure from molestation while going to and returning from the churches in Miṣr, especially on the nights of the Forty Days' Fast. In consequence of these outrages a great number of the Arabs were killed. There were in this quarter many chief men among the Christians; so they were allowed to restore their churches, and they began to rebuild Al-Hamrā, and to renew what had been destroyed there. They renewed the church [of Saint Mennas]⁴, and made for it beautiful

⁴ Al-Makrīzī mentions as the chief act of Al-Walīd ibn Rufā'ah, wālī of Egypt, that in A.H. 117 he allowed the Copts to rebuild the church of St. Mennas in the Hamrā. According to Al-Makrīzī, Al-Walīd died in A.H. 117=A.D. 735, after governing Egypt for nine years and five months. See Khitat, i. p. 111.

vessels of silver and other things. They also bought much property, Fol 30 a besides a garden in which were two wells with waterwheels; and all this property was occupied by houses. In the church was a large tank. Several churches in the upper story [of Saint Mennas] were rebuilt, namely the church of Saint George¹, which is said to have been originally dedicated to Saint Theodore²; and a church named after the martyr Saint John³. There was in it, [I mean] in the Great Church of Saint Mennas, the body of the martyr Saint John, on a stand of solid wood⁴. The river was near to this church, but afterwards receded from that place, and changed its bed until it reached the church of Theodore at Damanhûr⁵ upon the river, and did damage to that church, and afterwards removed to the church of the Lady at Shubrâ. The church of Saint John was restored, after the fire⁶, by the most honourable Shaikh Ibn Abû 'l-Fadâ'il ibn

² Our author does not state whether this is St. Theodore the Greek or Western (Amshîr 28=Feb. 22), St. Theodore the Eastern (Tûbah 12=Jan. 4), or St. Theodore of Shútâ (Abfîb 20=July 14).

Abū Sa'īd, in the caliphate of Al-Āḍid, and the vizierate of Shāwar. The church of the Holy Nativity looks upon the courtyard of the Great Church, and so does a very small church which was renewed by Abū Ghālib ibn Abī 'l-Makārim al-Bilbaisī, and named after Saint Mercurius.

In the Great Church¹ there is an ambon of coloured marble, the greater part of which is red and transparent ; it is supported by marble pillars, of skilful workmanship. There is also an episcopal chair of wood. Near [the ambon], on the north side, there is an altar, dedicated to the martyr Mercurius, and provided by the Shaikh Abū 'l-Fadl, son of the bishop, which has a wooden tablet² upon it. Above the altar in the sanctuary, there is a wooden cupola³, supported by marble pillars ; and upon this altar too there is a wooden tablet.

Near this church is the monastery, entered by a separate door ; and here there are a number of nuns, in separate habitations. In the monastery there is a well of running water, which was dug and sounded and furnished at the expense of the Shaikh Abū Zakarī Aṣ-Ṣairafī, in the caliphate of Al-Hāfiẓ.

§ Within the sanctuary was [the entrance to] the bakehouse⁴, in which is an ancient tomb. This bakehouse was selected by the Shaikh Al-As'ad Ṣalīb ibn Mīkhā'il, the son of the hegumen⁵, who separated it off, and made it a church, dedicated to Saint George, with a separate door near the Great Church, and also a door from the sanctuary. When he had completed this church, it was consecrated by the bishop Anbâ Mark, bishop of Cairo, in the presence of Anbâ Jonas¹, the patriarch ; and the liturgy was celebrated in it.

Much opposition was made by evil-minded Muslims during the furnishing of this church, and so the Christians explained that it rightfully belonged to this [Great] Church, and was not a new building ; and God helped the right, and those among the Muslims who knew, testified that it had been a chamber within the church, according to the testimony of those who lived near the church.

Fol. 31 a This church stands among gardens, and is beautifully situated ; and is much frequented by the monks and others.

§ In the month of Jumâdâ the First, in the year 559, when the Kurds and the Ghuzz came with Salâh ad-Dîn Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb, and the king of the Franks² was appealed to for help against them, then this monastery and this church were burnt to the ground, except the apse³, and the northern and southern sides of the sanctuary, which were preserved intact. These were restored, and domes and arches were built, and piers [were set up] instead of the marble columns, in the caliphate of Al-'Âdîd, and in the vizierate of Shâwar. The expenses were paid by the most excellent Shaikh Salîb, already mentioned, and by Karîm ad-Daulah ibn 'Ubâid ibn Kurrûş al-Jullâl, and by Mansûr ibn Salîm al-Jullâl, of Cairo, and by others ; and out of the money brought by Makârim ibn Abû 'l-Minnâ, the priest of the Church of the Lady, called Al-Mu'allakah, at Miṣr, to Anbâ Jonas, the patriarch, as a consecration fee⁴, that he might make him bishop of

Tunbudhâ¹, although the acceptance of such fees is forbidden by the canons. So the patriarch accepted the money for this object, and [the priest] was consecrated bishop. [The expenses were also paid] out of the money raised by the sale of the silver vessels belonging to the church. By the restoration, the church was completely furnished, as it had been before ; and it was consecrated, and the liturgy was said in it.

§ The church of Saint John, which has already been mentioned, built Fol. 81 b above the Great Church², was restored by the Shaikh Khâssat ad-Daulah Abû 'l-Fadâ'il, known by the name of Ibn Dukhân, and was consecrated, and the liturgy was said in it. He also rebuilt, in front of it, a tower, close to it, which was old and had fallen to ruin ; he built it in three stories in a place which belonged to the monastery. This and the furnishing were [partly] paid for by the most excellent Shaikh Salib, the above mentioned. The tower was not, however, completed ; and the cause of the delay was Abû 'l-Barakât, son of the excellent Shaikh Abû 'l-Fakhr ibn Sibuwaih.

While the aforesaid church was being restored, the greater part of the monastery was destroyed. [The Shaikh Salib] also dug a great well for a water-wheel. He also built the first story of the tower, and half of the second story ; and he was making efforts to finish it, when he was addressed by the aforesaid Abû 'l-Barakât, who said : 'None shall finish this work but I, with my own money.' In the courtyards outside this church there are burying-grounds. The rest of the monastery and the pavilion have not been finished up to this time. Five wells have been dug in this monastery, and in the courtyards which surround it and are its property.

The greater part of the houses and the shops, bought for this monastery when it was restored, were ruined ; and those which remained were left deserted, and were surrounded by ruins. Then they were sold

Fol. 32 a by Anbā Mark, bishop of Misr, to a certain man, who demolished them, and carried away the bricks and the timber; so that this monastery remained in the midst of ruins, among the mounds of rubbish.

§ Among the dependencies of the church, within the wall which surrounds it, and on the northern side, there is a church, named after Saint Theodore, which is suspended¹ and supported on marble columns. This church was wrecked, and its columns were carried away, and it was turned into a mosque, in the caliphate of Al-Hâkim; and a minaret was built for it. The architectural features and the wall of this church remain outside the fabric. There is also, in the Hamrâ al-Wustâ, a church named after Saint Coluthus², built in the caliphate of Al-Âmir, and under the government of Suwârr ibn Rufâ'ah, on ground bought by the Christians from the tribe of Banû Fahm; it stood near the baths of Ibn Najâh, and the alley named Zukak ibn 'Akîl³.

Ḩamrā ad-Dunyā, and the first part of them was that which was laid out by the tribe of Bili ibn al-'Umar ibn al-Ḥāfi ibn Kuḍā'ah, from the street called Darb Az-Zajjājīn, by which the market-place called Sūk Wardān is entered, to the alley called Zukāk Abū Farwah, or its vicinity, and it ends at the passage called Khaukhat al-Isṭabl in the Ḥamrā. That which was laid out by the tribe of Banū Bah̄r ibn Suwādah ibn Afṣā extends from the Ḥamrā ad-Dunyā, opposite the mosque of Al-Ḳurān, to the covered passage called Saḳifat as-Sarī or its vicinity. That part of the Ḥamrā al-Wustā which was laid out by Hadhīl ibn Madrakah extends from the guard-house of Abū 'I-Mahājir or its vicinity to the place called Bain al-Kūmain¹. That of these quarters is given by Al-Makrīzī, Khiṭāt, i. p. ٢٩٨, and by Ibn Dukmāk, iv. p. ٣ f. It is difficult at the present day to identify many of the points described.

¹ Bain al-Kūmain is south of the Roman fortress where Dair Bāblūn and Dair Tādrūs are situated. Jabal al-Kabsh is a rocky elevation in the quarter of Ibn Ṭūlūn, and upon it stood the well-known Ḳal'at al-Kabsh, of which a good illustration with an interesting note is given in R. Hay's Illustrations of Cairo, London, 1840, fol. The hill on which this castle stood was also called Jabal Yashkur. As far as I am aware there is no moat or canal at the foot of the hill now. But it is evident so far that Abū Ṣāliḥ is speaking of a quarter extending from the Bāb Ibn Ṭūlūn across the present rubbish-mounds in a south-westerly direction to Dair Bāblūn. The mention of St. Mennas below gives another fixed point, if it may be identified with the present Dair Mārī Mīna; and this would show that Al-Ḥamrā extended also west of the line from Bāb Ibn Ṭūlūn to Dair Bāblūn, in the direction of the Khalīj. Finally Dair Abū 's-Saifain, lower in the text, is described as situated in the Ḥamrā ad-Dunyā. Al-Makrīzī states that under the Abbaside caliphs the Further Ḥamrā was again built over, and called Al-'Askar, so that a plain which had grown bare save for the Christian monasteries dotted over it was once more covered with houses. See Hamaker's Expugnatio Memphidis, notes, p. 102. In the Mémoires de la Mission Archéologique Française au Caire, 1881–1884, there is an essay on the early topography of Cairo, illustrated with four plates, which are exceedingly interesting and, as far as they go, most valuable. But the author has strangely neglected this region of Old Cairo and Al-Ḥamrā, devoting all his learning and talent to the Fatimide city. On p. 417 (tom. i) there is a brief note upon Al-Ḥamrā, which certainly makes the boundaries part which was laid out by the tribe of Banū 'l-Azraq extended from the Ḥamrā al-Kuṣwā to the street of Yashkur ibn Jazīlah ibn Lakhm, and to Al-Ḳantarah and its road, down to the moat or canal, at the foot of the Jabal al-Kabsh, and to Al-Majā'iz and the monastery of Mary or its vicinity ; and the flat below the hill is all named after Yashkur, from the cemetery and the mosque of Al-Khalūk and the pool of Kārūn and the hill of Yashkur ibn 'Udwān ibn Lakhm.

The Book of Al-Khitāṭ also relates that the tribe of Banū Kinānah ibn 'Amr ibn al-Ḳibr ibn Fahm laid out that part of the Ḥamrā al-Wuṣṭā which extends from the alley of Sahl ibn 'Aḳīl to the conduit where the wheat-sellers are, and the alley called Zuḳāk at-Turmus, opposite the church of Saint Mennas ; and that the tribe of Banū Rūbil, whose ancestor Rūbil was a Jew, laid out part of Al-Ḥamrā, as far as the monastery of Mary, north of the gardens of Hawī and the mosque of Al-Khalūk on the flat. The sons of Yashkur ibn Jazīlah ibn Lakhm laid out part of the Ḥamrā al-Kuṣwā, namely the open place of Ad-Dunyā and that of Ar-Rāyah, and the road of Khūlān from the Darb al-Ḳantarah to the market-place of Wardān, and from the road of Al-Ḥamrā and the part beyond it on the Nile, which is called the place of Al-Ḳabā'il, to the stable and to the baths of 'Aṣ-Ṣalib' or 'the Church'.¹ of the district too narrow : and it is not even marked on the plan which professes to show Fustāṭ Misr in the year 969 A.D. The old bed of the river is well shown in contrast with the present line : but there again the plan seems to me erroneous, inasmuch as for the whole river frontage of Old Cairo the present line of the bank is given, and the divergence of the old channel from the present channel is made to begin at a point by the Fum al-Khalij and to extend only northward of that point, whereas there can be little doubt that even in the tenth century the bed of the river southward from Fum al-Khalij to Қaṣr ash-Shama' was still eastward of the present line. (A. J. B.)

¹ The baths of Al-Fustāṭ and Cairo often changed their names. The bath of 'the Church' (الكنيسة) was named after the church of St. Sinuthius, which stood near it. This bath was also called the 'Bath of the Vault' (حمام القبو). See Ibn Dukmāk, iv. p. 101.

Church of Saint Onuphrius.

In the Hamrâ also is the church¹ of Saint Onuphrius², the holy man, the pilgrim, the contemplative, which was restored by a woman named Tursah, according to the testimony of an [inscribed] board which was put up at the door of it, near the well which is now filled up; and through this door the women entered. Near this church were the houses where lived Amîn al-Umanâ Abû 'l-Yaman Sûrus ibn Makrâwah, son of Zanbûr) who was nâzir of the Delta, and his son the incomparable vizier, the lord of those that wield the sword and the pen, Abû Sa'd Mansûr³. The latter was sent out to meet Nâṣir ad-Daulah ibn Hamdân and the tribes of Kais⁴ and Lawâtah⁵, the traitors, and a body of the chief officers of the army were with him; this was in the caliphate of Al-Mustansîr. Abû Sa'd remained vizier for a short time only, for the soldiers demanded their pay of him, and he promised it and then fled, and his career came to an end.

At the entrance of the sanctuary in this church [of Saint Onuphrius], there was a threshold of black granite, upon which were figures carved

'The church called after Abû Nafar: this church is in the Middle Hamrâ in the street of Kibârah, near the mosque which is there.'

² This saint, called in Arabic Abû Nafar, whose festival is kept on Ba'ûnah 16 = June 10, and by the Roman church on June 12, was a hermit in Upper Egypt. His life was written by St. Paphnutius (see below, fol. 65 b), of whom Onuphrius was an elder contemporary. See Synaxarium, Paris MS. Arabe 256, fol. 228; Acta SS. at June 12, where versions of the life by Paphnutius are given. Onuphrius would seem to have died about A.D. 400.

and painted in the style of those in the ancient temples, and it was placed there to prevent the little birds from going into the sanctuary, or into the tank; and it is said that a man from Upper Egypt, who visited this church, passed the night here, and imagined that he could decipher certain letters upon the stone¹. In this way the tank was freed from the little birds which went into it.

Fol. 33 b The church was burnt during the fire of Miṣr, in the month of Ṣafar, A. H. 564 (A.D. 1169), in the caliphate of Al-Ādīd, and the vizierate of Shāwar. It was afterwards restored, with its domes and arches, by the Shaikh Abū 'l-Makārim ibn Hannā the scribe, and by other Christians. Among the churches attached to this church of Saint Onuphrius, there is, on the ground floor, a church dedicated to Saint Coluthus, restored by Abū 'l-Fakhr ibn Furaij ibn Khuwair, [who was priest] in the church of the Island of Miṣr²; and, in the upper story, is the church of Saint Mennas, built by the Shaikh Sa'íd ad-Daulah ibn Munjā ibn Abū Zakārī ibn as-Sarīd. There is also a church of the Pure Fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, restored by the Shaikh Abū Sa'íd Gabriel ibn Buḳtur, known as Ibn al-A'raj, and afterwards by Abū 'l-Fakhr, the scribe of salaries³, known as Sa'ídān. There is also the church of Saint Or⁴, restored by the Shaikh Abū 'l-Fakhr, the scribe of salaries of

² The Island of Miṣr is north of Raudah or Roda, the large island in the Nile nearly opposite to Old Cairo. There was a Coptic monastery upon this island called Dair ash-Shama', doubtless from its proximity to the Kaqr ash-Shama'. (A. J. B.)

It is stated, in the *Guide to the Festivals*³, that, on the 7th of Kîhak, Ibn Kâtib al-Farghâni was beheaded. It was he who superintended Copt.* p. 299; Synaxarium (Paris MS. Arabe 256), ad diem; Acta SS. at Aug. 7. The prefix Abâ (اب) is the Coptic &π&, and appears in Greek as ἀνᾶ (Greek inscriptions at Philae), or ἀννα (Callimachus, Hymn. in Dianam 6, and Greek papyrus quoted by Karabacek). Whether it is a form of Abbâ, the Syriac ܐܒܐ, generally written in Coptic as &ԲԲ&, is disputed. It was sometimes applied to secular officers.

² The Great Church means, of course, the principal church, to which these smaller churches or chapels were added, whether above it, or contiguous to it on the same level.

اليوم السابع عشر من هتور الذى اتفق عليه دلالات اسكندرية والدلال الذى كتبه ابنا
يونس اسقف فقط دلال الملكية ان اليوم السابع عشر من هتور نياحة القديس يوحنا

'The 17th day of Hatûr, on which, as it is agreed by the Guides of Alexandria, and the Guide written by Anbâ Jonas, bishop of Kîft, and the Guide of the Melkites, the death of Saint John Chrysostom is commemorated,' &c. (Paris MS. Arabe 256.)

The ordinary Synaxaria, however, do not mention the death of this Coptic martyr Ibn Kâtib.

Fol. 34 a the construction of the Nilometer¹, in A. H. 247² (A. D. 864), and his body is in the church of Saint Coluthus, which was a separate church in the caliphate of Al-Âmir, and has already been mentioned, in connection with the church of Saint Mennas in the Middle Hamrâ.

At the time of the fire already mentioned, the threshold of black granite, which has been described, was removed and placed at the outer entrance, near a well of running water, where there is a burying-ground.

The garden which lies opposite to this church was its property, until it was sequestrated by the Dîwân of the government, in the caliphate of Al-Âmir. The material of all the houses in the neighbourhood, the property of Ibn Zanbûr, was sold, and the ground was turned into a single courtyard, in which was a well with a water-wheel, skilfully constructed. All this property was bought, and devoted to the use of the church, by the Shaikh Şanî'at al-Mulk Abû 'l-Faraj, ¹ This was in the caliphate of Al-Mutawakkil, the Abbaside, and under Yazid ibn 'Abd Allâh the Turk, governor of Egypt.

² The date here given corresponds with that generally recorded by Arab historians for the completion of the Nilometer. Some repairs were carried out by Ahmad ibn Tûlûn twelve years later, but Al-Makrizî, As-Suyûtî, and Al-Ishâkî agree that the Nilometer had been very little altered up to their own time, and there is no doubt that it remains substantially the same now. The pointed arches used in the construction of this Nilometer are about sixteen years older than those in the mosque of Ibn Tûlûn, and they are of course much older than any example of the pointed arch in Gothic architecture. Lane thinks it probable that both the mosque and the Nilometer were built by the same architect. It was known that the mosque of Ibn Tûlûn was built by a Copt, and if Lane's theory is correct, we have his name in Ibn Kâtib al-Farghâni, the Coptic architect of the Nilometer. See Lane's Modern Egyptians, vol. ii. p. 341 (App. F); S. Lane Poole's Art of the Saracens in Egypt, pp. 54-55; Murray's Egypt, vol. ii. pp. 174, 232 (6th ed.). Pococke (vol. i. p. 29) gives a cut showing a plan and section of the Nilometer, and claims special credit for its accuracy; but he exhibits circular, not pointed arches. Norden's section is better; see his Voyage d'Égypte et de Nubie, Copenhagen, 1755, fol., plate xxvi. (A. J. B.)

son of the Shaikh 'Ilm as-Su'adâ Abû 'l-Yaman, son of the Shaikh Şanfât al-Mulk Abû 'l-Faraj ibn al-Wazîr, who handed over the management to the Shaikh Abû 'l-Makârim ibn Hannâ, and to those whom he should choose after him. This church was included within the fortress built by Shâwar the vizier, who constructed a passage leading to the church, at which you arrive from the entrance of the mosque of Al-Kurûn¹, in the nearer Hamrâ. This mosque was built by As-Sâhî ibn Al-Hakam. To this church belonged the hegumen Fol. 34 b Bashîr ibn an-Nashr, a native of Munyat al-Umarâ², who was wise and learned, a good priest, sweet-voiced, beautiful in countenance, perfect in stature, respected by men. The Shaikh Abû 'l-Faḍl ibn al-Usküf, scribe of Al-Afḍal Shâhanshâh, was assiduous in his prayers in this church, and communicated in it; and when he had received the eucharist, each day that he came, he threw into the plate³ a dinar for this priest, on account of the pleasure which he took in his ministration and the sweetness of his voice. This priest was drowned in the Bahî al-Jîzah; may God give rest to his soul!

The Hamrā ad-Dunyā was formerly called Al-Bawāṣir, and the river ran by it, and it was also called the Bank of As-Sa'ir. The book of Al-Khiṭāṭ bi-Miṣr testifies [that near] the Kaisāriyat al-Jamāl¹ stands the important church dedicated to the martyr Mercurius²; and this church was upon the bank of the river, which has now receded from it. The church was restored by the father Anbā Ephraim, the Syrian, the [sixty-second] in the order of succession³, in the caliphate of Al-Imām Al-'Azīz bi-'llāh, son of Al-Imām Al-Mu'izz li-dīnī 'llāh. In ancient times there had been a church dedicated to Saint Mercurius, on the bank of the river, but it was ruined and turned into a storehouse for sugar-canies. Then, in the time of this patriarch, enquiries were made about the creed of the Christians, whether they believed in the truth

² We are now coming to the history of the present church of Abū 's-Saifain. The tradition that the Nile came near it consists with the similar tradition concerning Kasr ash-Shama' (see R. Hay's Illustrations of Cairo, where is an excellent sketch of the great Roman gateway and the two bastions adjoining; see also note upon the plate). The main, and I think decisive, reason for this identification lies in the absolute certainty of the association of the existing church of St. Mercurius or Abū 's-Saifain with the legend attached to the church of St. Mercurius of the text. The story as related to me by the priest of the church, and the legend recorded by Al-Makīn in the fourteenth century, are both given in Coptic Churches, i. pp. ۱۲۴-۱۲۷: and the one-eyed water-carrier of the legend corresponds with the one-eyed tanner of Abū Ṣalīḥ's earlier version. or in a lie. So the Christians assembled and went out to the mountain, Fol. 35 a and the Muslims and Jews went out at the same time, on account of a certain event which is related in the history of the church. Many of the Muslim *sayyids*¹ came forward, and prayed, and cried Allâhu akbar, and implored the assistance of God, but no sign appeared to them. Then the Jews followed them, and still no result followed. Then the patriarch came forward, and the tanner, for whom God had performed a miracle, followed him; and all the orthodox people followed them. They prayed to the most high God, and burnt incense, and cried *Kyrie eleison*² three times; and God showed his wonders, and the mountain moved: namely, that part of the Muqâttam hills which is near the hill of Al-Kabsh, between Cairo and Miṣr. This miracle took place through the faith of the tanner, who had plucked out his own eye by the root, and in the presence of Al-'Azîz³ and the chief men of his government, and the cadis of the Muslims. When Al-'Azîz had witnessed this great miracle, he said: 'It is enough, O patriarch; we recognize what God has done for you;' and then he added: 'Desire of me what thou choosest, and I will do it for thee.' The patriarch, however, refused with thanks; but Al-'Azîz begged him to ask for something, and did not cease until the patriarch had asked for a certain church, which had fallen into ruin. So Al-'Azîz Fol. 35 b commanded that this church should be restored for the patriarch, and it is said to have been the church of Saint Mercurius.

When the patriarch was about to begin to work upon this church, the common people of the Muslims attacked him. For the church had fallen into ruin, and nothing was left to mark it except the walls, which were also in a state of decay; and it had been turned into a storehouse for sugar-canies. So the command was issued that it should be restored by the patriarch, and that money should be allowed him from the treasury, as much as he should ask for. The patriarch, however, took the decree, but returned the money, with apologies, saying : 'God, to whom be praise, who has shown his great power, is able to assist in the erection of houses for his worship, and has no need of this world's money.' And he begged Al-'Aziz to restore the money to its place, and not to force him to accept it ; so the caliph consented to his request. And when the patriarch was hindered, by those who attacked him, from restoring the church to its original state, and when they raised disturbances and showed their indignation at the matter, news was brought to the prince of the faithful, Al-'Azîz bi-'llâh, that the common people would not allow the patriarch to carry out the decree for the restoration of the church. Then Al-'Azîz commanded that a body of his troops and his mamelukes should go and stand by during the rebuilding of the fabric, and should repulse any who tried to hinder it, and punish them as they deserved for opposing 'that which we have decreed to them¹'. When the people saw this, they refrained from their attacks. Thus the work was begun.

Now it happened at that time that the Shaikh Abû 'l-Yaman Kuzmân ibn Mînâ, the scribe, travelled to Palestine and the surrounding districts, and remained there a considerable time, employing himself in the work to which he had been called ; and in this way he gained much money. He lived a solitary life, for he was not married ; and none lived with him except his servants ; and he was abstemious and contented with little, and economical in his way of life. So he brought the money which he had laid by to the aforesaid patriarch, when he was about to return to Syria, to continue the work to which he had been called by the government of the caliph ; and he said to the patriarch : 'Spend all this money in the path of God ; in building churches, and in other pious works for the sick and orphans and the poor, according to the will of the most high God ; and may he impute it to me as a good deed !' So he departed to go to Syria ; but before he left he gave two thousand dinars to the monasteries in the desert of Saint Macarius¹, and he begged the monks to remember him in their prayers, and to pray for the continuance of peace and a good end.

So the patriarch began the restoration², and a body of the chief men and the orthodox laity helped him in this work, and brought him that which he needed of various kinds for the restoration ; and the pages and soldiers and mamelukes of the prince of the faithful stood by with him, to prevent attacks that might be made upon him, until the work was finished with the help of God. Then the church was consecrated, and the first liturgy was celebrated in it, on the middle altar ; and that Fol. 36 b was a day of great joy and exultation over that which God had done from the beginning to the end.

After this the patriarch began to restore dilapidated churches, and to renew those parts of them that were falling into decay. All this is related in the *Lives of the Patriarchs*³; but I abridge the account of it here, that it may not be tedious. Thus the churches were put into good order.

Burning and Restoration of the Church of Saint Mercurius.

§ After the fire of Miṣr, caused by the mob of Mahometans of that city and of Alexandria, in the caliphate of Al-‘Ādīd, and in the vizierate of Shāwar, in the month of Ṣafar, in the year 564 (A.D. 1168), [the church of Saint Mercurius also was burnt]. Now the patriarch Anbâ Jonas⁴, the seventy-second in the order of succession, had foretold that the last-named church should be burnt, and that this should take place in the time of another patriarch ; and so it came to pass. The cause of the burning of this church was that the Christians had brought many gifts to it, and had made for it many splendid vessels ; so the mob of Muslims desired to pillage it thoroughly, but were unable to do this.

⁴ Or John ; he occupied the see from A.D. 1147 to 1167.

Fol. 37 a Then a large multitude of them assembled and gave way to their fury, and set fire to the church, so that nothing remained except the walls, and a small chapel within it, which was not burnt. This chapel was dedicated to John the Baptist¹, and here the liturgy continued to be said, until the Christians decided to restore the Great Church aforesaid. So they restored it, and completed the sanctuary, and substituted for the roof of timber cupolas and arches of baked brick. The wooden baldakyn over the middle altar was renewed, and a wooden tablet was placed upon the latter. The wooden baldakyn over the middle altar was exceedingly handsome, of skilful workmanship, and supported on four pillars of hard marble². All this was provided by the Shaikh Abū 'l-Barakāt ibn Abū Sa'id Hablān, the scribe, in the year 892 of the Righteous Martyrs (A. D. 1175-6)³, at his own expense; except the pillars, which were paid for out of the funds of the church, consisting of that which the chief men subscribed towards it, and that which was brought by the bishops, who were appointed to vacant sees, as a present from them. For this was in the patriarchate of Anbā Mark⁴, who was known, before his promotion, as Abū 'l-Faraj ibn Zar'ah, the scribe; and this patriarch forbade the acceptance of bribes for consecration, in obedience to the command of the law, 'Cursed is he who receives, and cursed is he who gives ;' and this was one of the good deeds of this patriarch. This was in the caliphate of Al-Ādīd, and the vizierate of the most glorious Yūsuf an-Nāṣir ibn Ayyūb, brother of Asad ad-Dīn Shirkūh¹, the Kurd, Fol. 37 b under the dynasty of the Ghuzz. This restoration was superintended by three architects, among the principal architects of Cairo. This church had been the episcopal church, until the death of Anbā Philotheus, bishop of Cairo ; but Christodulus² transformed it into a patriarchal church³, and appointed an income for Anbā Gabriel, the successor of Philotheus, which he continued to receive from it ; and arranged that he should say liturgies here at fixed times continually, as the *manzarah*⁴ bears witness. In the upper story of this church was the chapel⁵ of

² The sixty-sixth patriarch ; he occupied the see from A. D. 1047 to 1100.

Saint George¹, with the lofty cupola, erected by the Shaikh Abû 'l-Faḍl Yuhannâ, son of Kîl, the bishop; whose father received the name of John at the time of his promotion as bishop to the see of Atrib². The cupola and the sanctuary, that is to say the altar, and the walls of this chapel remained whole and untouched at the time of the fire. Ibn Abû 'l-Faḍa'il ibn Farrûj built an enclosure around this church, which he also whitewashed and paved; and it was solemnly opened in the year 570 (A.D. 1175).

Church of the Archangel Michael.

The church of the angel Michael³ was the patriarchal Cell from westward was burnt. I may be pardoned for quoting a description of the existing chapel written twelve years before I had seen Abû Ṣâliḥ. ‘The choir of this chapel retains part of the ancient panelled roof which probably once covered the whole triforium. The beams and coffers are sumptuously gilt, and coloured in the style of the thirteenth century: but only faint relics of its former beauty remain.’ By putting the date somewhat earlier—and merely architectural dates in these churches are not very certain—one may possibly identify this ceiling as previous to the general restoration. If not, it certainly dates from that epoch. (A. J. B.)

¹ The Arabic forms of the name George are various, but correspond to different Coptic forms of the same word. We have in Arabic Jirjiyûs (جرجيوس), Jirjis (جرجيس), Jirj (جرج), Jirjah (جرحة), and the diminutive form Juraij (جريج); and in Coptic we find ጥዬዥርዮስ, ጥዬዥር, ጥዬዥር, ጥዬዥር, ጥዬዥር, ጥዬዥር, and ጥዬዥ. See Mr. W. E. Crum’s Coptic MSS. from the Fayyām, Index i. (A. J. B.)

the time of the promotion of Anbā Gabriel¹ Abū 'l-'Ulā, son of Tarīk the scribe, the seventieth in the order of succession, and after him under Anbā Jonas², the seventy-second. This Tarīk was a priest, who lost his wife, and then solicited the rank of bishop; but when the patriarch demanded money of him, he refused to gain promotion to a rank in the hierarchy by bribery. Then, since he had much wealth, he built this church, and ceased to solicit the dignity of bishop. This Fol. 38 a was in the patriarchate of Anbā Michael³ the Sinjārite⁴. The church was restored by the Shaikh As-Sadid Abū 'l-Faḍā'il, known as Ibn Sittumi'ah(?), the scribe of the Emir 'Alī ibn Aḥmad, the Kurd, in the caliphate of Al-Mustadī, the Abbaside, and in the vizierate of An-Nāṣir Yūsuf ibn Ayyūb, in the year 568 (A.D. 1172); and it was solemnly opened on the feast of the angel Michael, the 7th of Hatūr, in the year 809⁵ of the Blameless Martyrs, when the liturgy was said in it.

Church of Saint Anūb.

Adjacent to the last-named church, there is a church dedicated to church of St. Anthony, built on the same site as Abā Nūb. These, I think, were separate buildings, i.e. not part of Abū 's-Saifain; indeed this is proved by the fact of St. Michael being the patriarchal Cell, and having its own courtyard, and by the fact of Abā Nūb being turned into a summer residence. But it is remarkable that these three names are found attached to three chapels side by side in the upper story of Abū 's-Saifain: see Coptic Churches, i. p. 119, plan. There can be little question that these three chapels are meant to preserve the names of the three churches which have perished. (A. J. B.)

the glorious martyr Saint Anûb¹, to the expenses of which the patriarch Anbâ Gabriel contributed. It is said that it was founded by Abû Naşr, brother of Abû 'l-'Ulâ ibn Tarîk, but was not finished; and then was newly built by the Shaikh As-Şâfi Buṭrus ibn Muhnâ, the scribe. Afterwards the priest Abû 'l-Khair, known as Ibn al-Amâdi, chose to pass the summer at the church of Saint Anûb, and in part of the courtyard in front of [the adjacent church of] Michael; and here the patriarchs generally sat on a wooden dais, to enjoy the coolness during the days of summer. [Saint Anûb] was restored as a church after the fire, under the name of Saint Anthony, and was solemnly opened by Anbâ John, the seventy-ninth² patriarch, at the beginning of his patriarchate, in the year 903³ of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1187). All those named contributed to the expenses of the annual [dedication] festival. The [last-named] patriarch died in the year 923⁴ of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1207), on Thursday, the 1st of Bashans⁵; and in this very year his elder brother the priest died.

Church of Saint Sophia.

There is also an ancient church, broad and spacious, the walls of which became weak, and some of the paintings fell to pieces. It was formerly named *Agia Sophia*¹; and the building was wonderful for its plan and its construction and its symmetry. It was restored at the expense of the Shaikh Ṣafī ad-Daulah ibn Abū Yāsir ibn 'Alwan, the scribe.

² This should be 'seventy-fourth.'

Church of Saint Macarius.

There is a church named after Saint Macarius², attached to the last-named church. Those parts of it which had fallen to decay were renewed by the deacon Abū Ishāk ibn 'Abd al-Masīh.

Church of the Four Living Creatures.

There is the church of the Four Angels, who are the Living Creatures which support the most high throne³. It was restored by the Shaikh Ibn Amīn al-Mulk ibn al-Muhaddith Abū Sa'īd ibn Yūḥannā, the Alexandrian, the scribe, who constructed for it a wooden roof of skilful workmanship, in the year 893 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1176); [and it was opened] on Wednesday, the 8th of Hatūr, which is the festival of the Four Creatures. The church contains their special altar; and the altar named after the Presentation of the Lord in the Temple; and an altar dedicated to the martyr, the valiant Fol. 39 a Theodore Basrâdflâdus¹. The church was restored by Al-Mu'allim Zawîn, who was dâmin² of Cairo in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiż. Afterwards it fell into decay and ruin, and was restored by the Shaikh Al-Makin Abû 'l-Barakât, known as Ibn Kitâmah; and when it again fell into decay, it was restored by Amîn ad-Daulah ibn al-Muṣawwif, who added on the south side of it a sanctuary named after the glorious angel Michael. The church was consecrated by Anbâ Gabriel, bishop of Miṣr, under the government of Ṣalâh ad-Dîn Yûsuf³, the Kurd.

§ There is the church of Poemen⁴ the Confessor, adjacent to which is a sanctuary named after the Lady, between it and the church of Saint Coluthus⁵, which has already been described.

¹ Basrâdflâdus is a transcription of the Coptic ΠΕΣΤΡΑΤΗΛΑΤΗΚ, which is the Greek στρατηλάτης with the Coptic article prefixed. This word translated the Latin Magister militum or general of troops (in Arabic جندي), a post held by Theodore under Licinius. The saint is also called St. Theodore of Shuṭb, after the native town of his parents; and his festival is kept on Abîb 20=July 14. See Synaxarium (MS. Arabe 256) at that day; Amélineau, Actes des MM. p. 182 ff. St. Theodorus Dux (στρατηλάτης) is commemorated by the Roman church on Feb. 7 (see Acta SS.); but, although he suffered under Licinius, his history is different from that of the Coptic martyr. The Greek church also commemorates him.

This saint, whose festival is kept by the Copts on Kîhak 9=Dec. 5, was one of the famous hermits of Egypt in the fourth and fifth centuries. Some of the acts and sayings of Poemen or Pastor are to be found recorded in Rosweyde; Synaxarium (MS. Arabe 256) ad diem; Zoega, Cat. pp. 290, 299, 319, and 340. The Roman church commemorates Poemen on Aug. 24. He is said to have died in A. D. 451, at a very great age. See Acta SS. at Aug. 24.

There is the church of the glorious angel Gabriel. There is also, over the tank, a church named after Saint John the Baptist¹, restored by Abū 'l-Fath, of Upper Egypt, who was priest at the church of Al-Mu'allakah². It was roofed with great beams. On a recent occasion the blacks determined to pillage this monastery, and they attacked this roof, so that they succeeded in ruining the building. Afterwards it was restored by the aforesaid persons³, and was solemnly opened on Sunday, the 22nd of Barmahāt⁴, in the year 900 of the Blameless Martyrs (A.D. 1184), by Gabriel, bishop of Miṣr, and Anbā Peter, bishop of the Fayyūm. Near it is the tower, which is entered from the church, and beneath which lies the garden; it overlooks the lake of Al-Ḥabash, and the river Nile, and Al-Bustān.

Monastery of Saint John the Baptist.

[Attached to the last-named church is] the monastery of Saint John, which is of beautiful aspect, and wonderful for its situation near the lake of Al-Ḥabash, especially in the time of high Nile⁵, and in spring, and in the ploughing season and seed-time of summer. Yahyā ibn al-'Ubaidī the scribe was superintendent of this monastery; but Gabriel, the seventieth patriarch, called Abū 'l-'Ulā Ṣā'id, son of Tarik the scribe, was informed that the conduct of this man was worthy of blame, and that he treacherously allowed many Muslims to attend the liturgies. Accordingly the patriarch rebuked him for this time after time, but yet he did not amend; and at last he was expelled from the monastery, and was obliged to give it up until he should return to his faith. Yahyā suffered much from this, and at last repented, and consented to abandon his evil habits; and so the monastery was restored to him. Nevertheless, he returned to his reprehensible practices, and the remedy employed was of no profit. Therefore Yahyā was expelled again, and another was appointed in his place. It is said that through Abū Shākir, the scribe, of Alexandria, the removal of Yahyā was facilitated by the condition that he should be allowed to live in the tower, and to have the enjoyment of the garden. Satan induced ✓ Yahyā to abandon the Christian religion, and he became a Muslim, and made a *kiblah*¹ in the bakehouse, and another kiblah over the entrance into the monastery; and he did much injury to the monastery. He took

Fol. 40 a possession of the road by which the monastery was entered, and he separated the tower and the garden from the monastery, and allowed all except Christians to enter them; but the Christians took measures to open another door, near the first, leading into the monastery only. This was in the caliphate of Al-Hāfiẓ. Thus Yahya had possession of the tower and the garden. When that apostate died, after repenting and neglecting the matter of his religion, his sons acquired possession of the garden and the pavilion, and made use of them; and they also were Muslims.

Beside the same lake², near this monastery, stands the monastery named after Saint John the Baptist, celebrated for its beautiful and pleasant situation, but now in the possession of the Melkites. It was formerly restored by Abū 'l-Fadl ibn al-Baghdādi and Abū Nasr ibn 'Abdūn, known as Ibn al-'Addās, the metwalli of the Divan of Syria, in the caliphate of Al-Hākim. Ibn al-'Addās rose high in the affairs of the government and became Nāzir; his sobriquet was *Al-hamdu*³ lillāhi 'alā mā yastahikku.

³ 'Praise to God as He is worthy.'

In the upper story of this building was the remarkable manzarah, prepared for the assembling of the novices. Here were a large number of Melkite nuns, who were supported by Abū 'l-Fadā'il ibn Abī 'l-Laith, the scribe, the owner of a garden near this place, which he rented from the Divan of Upper Egypt, and which contained fine palm-trees, pomegranates, myrtles, and many kinds of trees, bearing excellent fruit, such as are not to be seen together elsewhere. When this Abū 'l-Fadā'il died, he left a nephew named Abū 'l-Makārim Maḥbūb, son of Abū 'l-Faraj al-'Abūdī, whose wife was the sister of Abū 'l-Barakāt ibn Abū 'l-Laith. Abū 'l-Makārim deserted the Christian religion, and became a Muslim, and was circumcised at the age of nearly forty years. He laid his hand upon the aforesaid garden, and took possession of it as part of his inheritance; he forced the nuns to depart from it, and he dismantled the manzarah, and turned it into a mosque. He also weakened the monastery. There he entertained the Imām Al-Hāfiẓ, who visited him there. So the monastery was weakened more and more; and the Melkites were prevented from visiting it. Then troubles followed one after the other, and the greater part of the monastery and the church fell into decay and perished. The Melkites had a bishop at Miṣr, named Joseph, who did what lay in his power to renew and restore this monastery; but the restoration remains to this day unfinished, on account of the weakness of the sect, and their small numbers, and the remissness of their head, and his neglect of the supervision of this place and others. The bishop of this sect at Miṣr began once more to visit this monastery on the Monday of the second week of the Great Fast, together with a great number of Melkites and Copts who assemble to hear the Lenten charge, and the instructions which are given them as to what must be done during that season. Moreover, festival is kept in this monastery on the second day of the feast of the bathing¹.

The Book of the Monasteries, by Ash-Shâbushtî¹, bears witness that this monastery is on the bank of the lake of Al-Habash, near the river, and that beside it are several gardens, one of which was laid out by the emir Tamîm, brother of Al-'Aziz bi-llâh; and in this there is a pavilion, the roof of which is supported by pillars. The pavilion is beautifully designed, skilfully constructed and adorned, and decorated with paintings; near it is a well called Bir Najâ'i, beside which grows a tall sycamore affording much shade; and here the people assemble to enjoy the shade, and saunter around the spot, when the Nile is high and the lake is full, and also when the crops are green and the flowers are blooming. Near the aforesaid sycamore is the bridge which leads to many roads, and at which men set lines for fishing during the days of high Nile; and this is a pretty sight.

night of the Epiphany was still observed; and not only the Christians but the Mahometans also followed the practice, and marked the festival by illuminations, and a fair with its usual accompaniments; many of them pitching tents beside the river. Al-Mas'ûdî, who witnessed the festival in A. H. 330=A. D. 942, describes the illuminations and festivities on this night ordered by Al-Ikhshîd, then governor of Egypt; and Al-Masîhî describes the observance of the festival by the Fatimide caliph Az-Zâhir in A. H. 415=A. D. 1024. See Al-Mas'ûdî, Murâj adh-Dhabab (ed. Barbier), ii. p. 364 f.; Al-Makrîzî, Khitât, i. p. 418.

He also decorated the walls and roof of the mosque. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörter. iii. p. 898; Al-Makrîzî, Khitât, ii. p. 115 f.; As-Suyûti, Husn al-Muâddarah, ii. p. v.

district of Al-Habash, near the Well of the Steps. On the wall of the apse of this church, a Coptic inscription was found, giving the date of the paintings upon it, namely the year 759 of the Martyrs¹ (A.D. 1043), in the patriarchate of Anbā Sinuthius², the sixty-fifth in the order of succession. At the end of the church were built two altars: one of them named after the martyr Saint Cosmas³, with his brothers and his mother, and the other named after Saint John, the martyr of Aswān; and these were built at the expense of Abū 'l-Barakāt, the above mentioned, in the year 572 (A.D. 1177). In the upper story is a church named after George the Martyr, erected by the Shaikh Al-Makīn Abū 'l-Barakāt ibn Kitāmah, the scribe, in the caliphate of Al-Fā'iz⁴; and the said shaikh also rebuilt, in the year 573 (A.D. 1178), beside the church of Saint Victor, a church named after Fol. 42a the martyr Saint Mennas, containing a well of running water. Near this church there is a garden, which belongs to it, but is now a desert, and nothing is left standing in it except palm-trees.

Opposite this church, and within the enclosure of the garden known as that which was founded by the vizier Abū⁵ 'l-Faraj, the West-African, in the caliphate of Al-Mustansîr, there is another church named after Saint Victor, which is now furnished and complete with its domes and walls. For a long time there was no liturgy there, and when this state of things had long continued, the vizier Ṭalâ'i¹ ibn Ruzzîk commanded that some of the columns should be taken to build the mosque which he founded in that part of Miṣr named Karâfah. The tribe of Karâfah were called Banū Ḥajaṣ or Banū Yûsuf ibn Wâ'il, and they took up their quarters at this place, when the Arabs conquered Egypt. The place was called Karâfah², a word which means 'copyist,' or 'copyist of books ;' and there were many monks here in hermitages and monasteries, and many churches, which the Muslims destroyed when they came with 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣ ibn 'Adî, in the month of Muḥarram of the year 20 (A.D. 641). Those of the hermitages which remain have been turned by the Muslims into minarets. Then their hands were stretched out, until they built of part of the walls of the hermitages the foundations of this garden, which at the present time is still in cultivation. Afterwards, Al-Ajall Tâj al-Mulûk Bûrî³, the Kurd, brother of Ṣalâh ad-Dîn Fol. 42 b Yûsuf, built many pavilions in this garden and outside it, and embellished them with marble and gilding, and spent much money upon them.

² The Greater and Lesser Karâfahs were the principal burying-grounds of Cairo and Fustât, and the name is still retained for the well-known cemetery where the 'tombs of the caliphs' and the 'tombs of the mamlûks' stand. The place was selected as a burying-ground immediately after the Arab conquest. Various accounts are given of the origin of the name : that it was the name of an Arab woman ; or of a branch of the tribe of Banū Maghâfir ; or, as the text suggests, a word of Greek origin (γραφεύς), meaning 'writer' or 'copyist.' See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iv. p. ١٤٠ ; Al-Makrîzî, Khiṭâṭ, ii. pp. ٣٦٣-٣٦٥.

Monastery of the Nestorians.

§ In this quarter also is the monastery known as the monastery of the Nestorians, dedicated to Saint George, and enclosed within a surrounding wall of hewn stone. It is beautifully and artistically constructed, and greatly celebrated as a place of resort. The Shaikh Abū 'l-Faḍā'il, the Nestorian, known as the physician of the tribe of Al-'Azamīyah, in the caliphate of Al-Āmir, restored it at his own expense, and renewed it in an excellent style, with hewn stone; and there were here many Nestorian monks. But when Al-Āmir was informed of this restoration, he issued a decree against Abū 'l-Faḍā'il, and acted extortionately towards him, and seized all his money; and the decree remained in force until the caliph had built a mosque within the monastery. The originator of this act of tyranny was Abū 'l-Faḍl Ja'far ibn 'Abd al-Mun'im, known as Ibn Abū Kirāt, the metwalli of the Dīwān al-Khāṣṣ¹ of Al-Āmir. There was some land attached to this monastery and belonging to it, outside the enclosure, and this land was farmed by Abū 'l-Barakāt ibn Kitāmah, the Jacobite scribe. There was now no one in the monastery, which was empty, and deprived of liturgies and prayers. One of the stewards of Kitāmah lived there, in a garden which was the property of his master; but the priest Yūsuf, the Nestorian, gained possession of it, and let the land to Muslims, and sold the upper story of the church at Miṣr, including the bakehouse, and let most of the property with which the Nestorian churches were endowed at low rents to the Muslims, for long periods. There are no Nestorians with him; but they live in the east, and in Persia, and in Al-'Irāk and Al-Mauṣil, and by the Euphrates, and in Mesopotamia; and in Egypt they are few in number and of a low class.

This monastery [of which we have been speaking] came into the possession of the Copts of Miṣr in the patriarchate of Anbā Mark ibn Zar'ah, the seventy-third in the order of succession, who made it patriarchal, and dedicated the church in it to Saint Philotheus¹ of Antioch. In the upper story of the monastery there are mangarabs; and the whole building is of hewn stone, within and without. The church was solemnly opened and the liturgy was said in it the first week of the blessed fast, namely on Tuesday, the 16th of Amshîr, of the year 899 of the Righteous Martyrs, which is equivalent to the 24th of Ramaḍân of the year 576 (A. D. 1181). [This change of ownership took place] because no Nestorians were left in Miṣr except one or two men. The monastery was solemnly opened by Anbâ Peter, bishop of the Fayyûm. It contains three altars: one named after Philotheus of Antioch; the second after John the Evangelist; the third after Thomas the Disciple. Its expenses were paid by the Shaikh Abû 'l-Mansûr ibn Bûlus, who also paid for the liturgies and the eucharistic elements and the rest, and did not cease to supply all that was needed until the day of his death. His son continued to provide for [the expenses of this monastery], as his father had done—may God rest his soul!—and appointed ministers, both priests and deacons. The monastery is now prosperous, and the people of Upper Egypt come to it, and open its door.

There is also a burying-place for the Coptic Jacobite Christians and the bishops of Misr, in the district of Al-Ḥabash; and the body of Anbâ Zacharias², the sixty-fourth patriarch, is buried there, and the people receive blessings from it; [and it was taken there] because he commanded at his death that he should be buried among the people of Miṣr, on account of his knowledge of the pre-eminence of their faith, and what they had suffered in the caliphate of Al-Ḥâkim³. In [the same burying-ground] also are the tombs of the bishops of Misr; and near

In this burying-ground there is a conspicuous monument of syenite, sculptured with a cross of points¹. Near the burying-ground is the Well of the Steps, with the sycamore beside it, and the guard-house. At the upper end of this ground, there is a cemetery of the Jews
Fol. 44 a and Samaritans, and when they come near the Christian cemetery they see the sign of the cross, and then they return to that part of the ground which Anbā Michael, the fifty-sixth patriarch², sold to the Jews, at the time when Aḥmad ibn Ṭūlūn extorted money from him. This patriarch also sold a church to the Jews³ in the Kasr ash-Shama', besides the property of the churches at Alexandria, and the herds of camels of the monks of the monastery of Saint Macarius. The Melkites, however, have no cemetery in the district of Al-Habash, but their burying-places are within their churches, and on the hill where the monastery of Al-Kuṣair stands. The Armenians and the Nestorians likewise [bury] in their churches.

§ The church of the Pure Lady Mary, called Al-Martūtī, is surmounted by a cupola. In ancient days this was a place of worship of the Israelites when they were in bondage in Egypt; and when our Lord Jesus Christ came down into Egypt from Syria, with his mother in the flesh, our Lady the Pure Virgin, and the righteous old man Joseph the carpenter, they sat in this place, where there is now a picture of the Lady before the holy altar. The church was founded by the Copts Fol. 44 b

under the name of the Lady, and was called Al-Martūtī, which is the Greek word *Matér-tō*¹, and means 'Mother of God the Word.' When this church grew old it fell into decay, and was restored by the Shaikh Abū 'l-Yaman Wazīr, a native of Sanhūr², and metwalli of the Divan of the Delta, and by Abū 'l-Mansūr, his son, in the caliphate of Al-Āmir, and in the vizierate of Al-Afdal Shāhanshāh. In its upper story Abū 'l-Yaman built a beautiful manzarah, called As-Salūkīyah, and the priests assembled there, and he conversed gaily with them; this was in the lunar year 478 (A. D. 1086), in the patriarchate of Cyril³, and the episcopate of Daniel. He also caused a complete set of vessels of goldsmiths' work to be made for this church, for the liturgy and the incense and all the needs of the church. dences and offices. A small garden was attached to the church, and was entered from the interior of the building ; and the door gave proof of its existence. So the government laid its hand upon this garden, and it was taken away from the church.

A certain Jew, named Abū 'l-Fakhr ibn Azhar aş-Şāni', became a Christian, and was converted to the religion of the Messiah, and was baptized in this church by Anbā John, bishop of Ṭamwāih, in the province of Al-Jīziyah, assisted by the priest Abū Yāsir ibn Abū Sa'd Fol. 45 a ibn al-Kuṣṭāl, in the caliphate of Al-Fā'iz, in the vizierate of Ṭalā'i' ibn Ruzzīk, and in the patriarchate of Jonas, the seventy-second in the succession ; this took place in the month of Rajab, in the year 554 (A.D. 1159). God enlightened this Jew so greatly that he learnt to read Coptic, and translated it into Arabic ; and he was ordained deacon, on account of his peculiar merits, in the church of the Pure Lady¹, in the Ḥārah Zawīlah, in the city of Cairo, by Anbā Gabriel, bishop of Miṣr, on the 15th of Abīb, in the year of the church 901 (A.D. 1185).

Adjacent to this church of Al-Martāt, is a church which had fallen into decay, but was restored by Abū 'l-Faḍā'il ibn Ash-Shubrāmūrayyīk², with the assistance of a body of Christians, in the year 902 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1186). The furnishing of the church was { completed by the Shaikh Abū 'l-Faraj ibn Zanbūr, the scribe of As-Sūbāsi the Turk, wāli of Cairo ; he paid the expenses himself, and he provided for it a dome and a roof, and constructed over the dome a beautiful dome of timber ; and he built in it two altars, one named after Saint George, and the other after the angel Michael. In the midst of the church he erected a long vaulted transept, in which he also opened a door which led to the altars in the old church ; and he separated them from one another. The number of altars in this church amounted to

In the upper story of this church, the steward, Sayyid al-Ahl, son of Thomas, the archdeacon, built a church in the name of Saint Mercurius, with a wooden altar², and it was consecrated by Anbâ John, the seventy-fourth³ patriarch, on the 10th of Bashans, in the year 910 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1194). The Shaikh Abû 'l-Yaman Wazîr removed the body of Saint John from the church at Damanhûr, near Cairo, to this church, because, so it is said, when he was in the neighbourhood of it on a certain night, he heard a voice from the shrine of the martyr, saying : 'I cannot remain in the church of the Lady ; there is no church for me except that in which I was at first.' Accordingly the body was restored thither.

In this neighbourhood, the Nestorians had a large monastery like a great castle, within an enclosing wall of hewn stone, and containing, a large church, separate and conspicuous, of which all the architectural features remain to this day ; but the apse has been turned into a Kiblah, and above it rises a lofty minaret, and, around it, the chambers, which belonged to the monks, are inhabited by Muslims ; and this change took place in the caliphate of Al-Hâkim.

At the church of Al-Martūtī, the history of which has been related, there was a priest named Abū Yāsir, son of the priest Abū Sa'd, known as Ibn al-Kūstāl, who maintained customs at variance with those prescribed by the pure Fathers: such as growing the hair long, and baring the head at the time of the liturgy¹, and christening infants without circumcision², and giving permission to the bridegroom to see the bride before marriage³. If a priest with shaven hair and covered head said the liturgy, he would not communicate from his hand, but he had a second liturgy for himself. Thus he divided the church into two parties; and, although he was often rebuked for this, he would not repent or change his opinions. The state of affairs required that in order to maintain the canons, he should be expelled from the church; may God reconcile him to himself!

To the church of this priest there was a garden attached, as it has already been related. This garden was seized by the emir Jabrīl, son of the Imām Al-Hāfiẓ, who built opposite to the church, near the river, in the place called Al-Khaimat al-kiblīyah, for the survey of the taxes, a manzarah, which was visited by the Imām Al-Hāfiẓ and the Imām Aż-Zāfir⁴, his son, during the lifetime of this emir Jabrīl; and after his death the Imām Al-Āqid came here. Each of them contributed to the support of this church, and received the food that was brought to him from the monastery. This church stands in the midst of the gardens, and from its upper story a view of the blessed Nile is obtained, as far as that part of the river bank on which Tamwāih, in the province of Al-Jizīyah, is situated, and as far as Munyat ash-Shammās⁵ and other places on Shahrân is celebrated as a spot frequented by visitors, on account of the beauty of its situation, and the views obtained from it of Miṣr and the river Nile ; so the Book of the Monasteries, by Ash-Shâbushti, testifies. Opposite this monastery of Shahrân, in the mountain on the east, there is a large cavern², supported by pillars like a house, which has been hollowed out in the side of the mountain, and is exceedingly extensive ; and it is said to be called ‘the city,’ and the end of it is unknown.

The monastery called Shahrân was restored by Poemen, the monk, who had been perverted to the religion of the Muslims, but returned to his own faith in the caliphate of Al-Imâm al-Hâkim, and became once more abbot of the monastery. This monk was the cause of the opening Fol. 47 b of the churches which had been closed, and of the changing of the costume³ which Al-Hâkim had enjoined, and which he had maintained for nine years, during which Zacharias, the sixty-fourth patriarch, was imprisoned⁴, and thrown to the lions, which did him no harm ; for God forbade the lions to touch the patriarch, on account of his holiness, and the strength of his faith in God. In the aforesaid monastery there is a tower, entered through the monastery, and it had a garden attached to it, measuring six feddans, in which were fruit-bearing palms and corn-plots. Al-Imâm al-Hâkim was fond of visiting the country at this monastery, and of taking the air here; and from it he went out to the mountain, and made journeys into the country.

Monastery and Church at Turâ.

§ The monastery known as the Monastery of the Potter is dedicated to Saint Mercurius. It is said also to have been named after the martyr Theodore. There is also a church, named after the glorious Saint George, which is in the district of Turâ, on the bank of the river. This church was small when it belonged to the Jacobite Copts; but at the time when Gregory¹, the patriarch of the Armenians, came to Egypt, and Amîr al-Juyûsh Badr was surrounded by Armenians, in the patriarchate of Anbâ Cyril, patriarch of the Jacobites, and the district of Turâ was allotted to the Armenians, then they seized this church, and pulled it down, and built instead of it a large and spacious church, with several cupolas, which was dedicated to the name of Saint George. Above it there rose a tower, the door of which was within the church; and the latter was enclosed within a wall, and within the enclosure there was a well and a water-wheel. Around the church there was a space planted with orange-trees, and two dzwairahs, which are fruit-bearing palms, and other trees. When, however, the series of misfortunes befell the Armenians, the church came back to the Jacobites, in the patriarchate of Anbâ Mark, known before his promotion as Abû 'l-Faraj ibn Zar'ah, the scribe; he was the seventy-third in the succession. In this church the priest named Abû Yâsir, whose history has been related with reference to the church of Al-Martât, which is called Al-'Adawiyah, restored all that was required for the furnishing of it ; and the people began again to frequent it at all times. Outside it, there are stone foundations visible on the surface of the ground, which are said to have been made for the purpose of building upon them a manzarah; but it was never fully prepared, and now there is only one fragment of building in a cracked condition. When the patriarch came to this church to consecrate it, an assembly of bishops and priests and of the Christian laity were present.

In another copy it is said that the monastery of Saint George came into the possession of the aforesaid priest Abû Yâsir, known as Ibn Fol. 48 b al-Kustâl, and was solemnly opened in the month of Ba'ûnah, in the year 559 (A. D. 1164), in the patriarchate of Anbâ John, with the consent of the Armenians. Abû Yâsir built in the upper story a church to the martyr Saint Mennas, and a church in the name of the great saint John the Baptist and of Gregory. The latter church was to the south of the great central sanctuary, in the monastery of the Armenians at Turâ, and it was consecrated on the 30th of Ba'ûnah, in the year 902 of the Righteous Martyrs (A. D. 1186); and the expenses of the building were paid at first by Ibn Mashkûr, and at the time of its consecration by Abû Mansûr, the superintendent of the building of the walls of Cairo and Misr. In the same monastery there is a tower, and a mill, and a garden which belonged to the Armenians; and, when it ceased to belong to them, it came into the possession of the Jacobites, after the year 600 (A. D. 1204). When the priest Abû Yâsir died, the monastery became the property of his disciples, and of the Copts, permanently down to our own time.

The eastern hills known as Al-Muqattam, which was the name of the son of Mizraim, the son of Misr, the son of Ham, the son of Noah. Muqattam was the first who worshipped on this spot, and here he gave himself up to the service of God ; so that after his time the mountain was known as Al-Mukattam. It is situated near Turā, by the stone-quarry, and is contiguous to Turā lengthwise, and it is a holy place.

§ The western range unites itself to the mountain chain of Western Africa and to the western shores, which at last reach the land of Ibn¹ Ghawāṭah, and the Dark Sea². The river Nile flows between these two mountain-ranges.

Melkite Monastery of Al-Kuṣair.

The monastery known as Al-Kuṣair is on the summit of the eastern mountain-range. From this monastery there is a view of the blessed Nile, and of the district of Turā. It was founded by Arcadius³, the Great, son of Theodosius the Great, emperor of the Romans, over the tomb of his teacher, Saint Arsenius, after whose name he called it. This Arsenius had fled from the emperor, and devoted himself to religious worship in the desert of Saint Macarius in the Wādī Habīb; but afterwards he removed to this mountain, and spent his time in worship there. This monastery was known as Kuṣair⁴. A great festival is kept there in honour of Arsenius, at which many people assemble. Below his church on the mountain-top, there is another church, hewn out in the rock with the pickaxe¹, and in it there is an altar. The monastery is on the upper part of the mountain and stands on a terrace, on a peak of the mountain, and is fairly constructed and commands a beautiful view. It has a well hewn in the rock, from which water is drawn. In the monastery there are excellent pictures, of extremely skilful and admirable execution. The monastery contains an upper room [built by] Abû 'l-Jaish Khamârawaih², son of Aḥmad ibn Tûlûn, which has four windows in its four sides. The road to this monastery from Miṣr is difficult, but on the southern side the ascent and descent are easy. At the side of it there is a hermitage, always inhabited by a hermit. The monastery overlooks the village named Shahrân and the desert and the monastery of Shahrân, which is a large and flourishing village, on the bank of the river, according to the testimony of the Book of the Monasteries, by Ash-Shâbushtî. This Al-Kuṣair is one of the monasteries that are visited for worship, and also for the pleasure of sauntering around them.

the Apostles, and he founded a cell for the bishops. The monastery is in the possession of the Melkites, and contains a body of their monks. There is kept every year the festival of Saint Arsenius, on the 13th of Bashans¹. This Eustathius was a linen-merchant, and he found a treasure in the place where the flax was beaten; and then he became a monk in this monastery, and built in it that which has been mentioned. After that, he was made patriarch of the Melkites, and the length of his patriarchate was sixty-four years². In this monastery there are eight churches, and they are enclosed within a wall. In it also there is a manzarah, and a cemetery; and below it there are many caves hewn in the mountain. The church of the Apostles in this monastery was destroyed in the caliphate of Al-Hâkim, in the month of Sha'bân, of the year 400 (A. D. 1010); and a band of the common people came here, and seized the coffins of the dead, and the timbers from the ruins. Afterwards it was decreed that [the monks] should restore the ruined building, and Al-Yâsâl, the brother of Tâj ad-Daulah Bahrâm, assigned to the monastery sixteen feddâns of land as an endowment.

There was in this monastery a mule, to carry the water from the river, and bring it up to the monastery; and one of the monks went down with it to fill up the quantity required; and the monk remained by the river, while the mule kept going backwards and forwards by itself, until he had finished his business. The monastery is enclosed within a stone wall; but on one occasion a mob of Muslims went up, and by a ruse induced the monks to open the gate to them, whereupon they entered and sacked the monastery, and killed some of the monks.

The monastery known as Al-Kuşair al-Hâkkâni is within the desert, and is uninhabited; it is half-a-day's journey from the monastery which is being described.

The number of churches at the monastery of Al-Kuşair, accord-

(1) In the upper part is the church of Saint Arsenius, the teacher of the sons of the emperors; and his body is buried under the altar, which is the only altar¹, and is surmounted by a baldakyn; over the middle of this church is a long vaulted² roof.

Fol. 50 b (2) A church named after our Lady Mary, the pure and holy Virgin, in which there is one altar, as in the former.

(3) The church of the Apostles or Disciples, in which there was a picture of the Lady, carrying the Lord, with angels on the right and on the left, and pictures of all the twelve disciples, the whole being composed of tesserae of glass³, and skilfully executed, as at Bethlehem;

The arrangement which he sketches is common enough, indeed is almost exactly reproduced in the haikal of Abû 's-Saifain (Coptic Churches, i. p. 112, see also p. 40). But there the design is painted on the wall, not wrought in mosaic: and as I have explained (id. ib. p. 37 seq.), there is no known instance of a picture in glass mosaic remaining in the Coptic churches, or anything to show that this form of art ever flourished in Egypt, though mosaic of another kind constitutes some of the most splendid decoration in churches and mosques alike. There is, however, some evidence from early writers to support the construction of the text.

and some of these glass tesserae were gilded and some were coloured. Khamârawaih, son of Ahmad ibn Tûlûn, used to stand before these

The allusion to Bethlehem is, of course, to the church of the Nativity erected there in A. D. 327 by the empress Helena, and it is possible that even at that date glass mosaics were employed for decoration : for those in the church of S. Pudenziana at Rome and S. Costanza at Naples are said to date from the fourth century. However that may be, there is no doubt that by the time of Justinian the walls of the church at Bethlehem were covered with mosaics, traces of which remain even at the present day in spite of renewals and destructions.

Eutychius records the visit of the caliph 'Umar to this church, his admiration for the mosaics in the southern transept ('for the whole vault was decorated with many-coloured designs in mosaic work'), and his order that no change should be made in the decoration (ed. Pococke, ii. pp. 158, 288). But the best account of these mosaics is given by De Vogüé in his Églises de la Terre Sainte, p. 66 ff.

The word rendered tesserae in the text is فصوص fusus, the plural of fusus. But Eutychius, in the passage just quoted, uses the word فسيفسا fusafisâ as the term for glass mosaics—a term derived from the Byzantine φύσιφοις. Now the author of the History of Damascus speaks of فصوص or tesserae, coloured and gilt, which are known as fusafisâ; and similarly Kamâl ad-Dîn defines fusafisâ as equivalent to فص مذهب or gilded tesserae. Further, Ibn Baṭūṭah mentions a mosque adorned with pictures of great beauty in gilt mosaic, and again of animal figures in mosaic. These authorities are quoted by Quatremère, Hist. des Sultans Mamlouks, ii. Liv. i. append. p. 270 n. But the point which Quatremère misses is that if these passages are examined, they are found all to establish the use of glass mosaics, but out of Egypt—in Syria and Arabia. I do not, however, know of any passage proving the use of Byzantine mosaic in Egypt to put beside this clear and explicit evidence of Abû Ṣâlih, here and on fol. 104 a. The splendid lamps of the type called Kalâ'ûnî, found till recently in churches and mosques, but now chiefly in museums, show what skill in glass-work the Egyptians possessed in mediaeval times—a skill far higher than would be needed for making the cubes of mosaic work. Going further back, we find record of famous glass-works at Fustât. Further back still, Olympiodorus of Alexandria wrote on the sacred art of alchemy, which included the making of glass coloured like precious stones. This was early in the third century, and the MS. is in the Bibliothèque pictures and admire the beauty of their execution, and was much delighted with them, especially with the picture of the Lady; so that he even built a manzarah for himself at this monastery, that he might come there for recreation. This church was very large; but Al-Hâkim destroyed it in the year 400 (A.D. 1010). Afterwards there was built on the same site a new church, named after Peter and Paul, in which there was one altar surmounted by a baldakyn, and over the middle of which there was a vaulted roof.

This Abû 'l-Barakât was the metwalli of the *Dîwân at-tahkîk*², in Nationale. See Hendrie's Theophilus or Arts of the Middle Ages, 1847, p. 163. The same most interesting work has a long account of glass-making and painting in Book II, and Greek enamelling and mosaic are described ib. ch. xiii–xv. pp. 133–135. Strabo was told by the glass-workers of Alexandria that they were enabled to execute their magnificent works of art solely through the existence in Egypt of a peculiar earth (Book XVI, ch. ii. § 25, quoted by Perrot & Chipiez, Hist. of Art in Egypt, ii. p. 375). Indeed the manufacture of glass is now supposed to have had its origin in Egypt, and the art of enamelling which flourished under the caliphs certainly began with the Pharaohs. (A. J. B.)

¹ This 'Melkite' saint is, of course, not also revered by the monophysite Copts, since he was the great opponent of the monophysite leader, Severus of Antioch, and the determined adherent of the Roman see.

² This was the board which regulated the expenses of the government. The metwalli of this Divan was a person of high rank. In A.H. 501 a sum of 700,000 dinars is said to have passed through the hands of this Divan, apart from the expenses of the officials, and Abû 'l-Barakât ibn Abî 'l-Laith arranged the dinars in boxes on one side of the room and the dirhams on the other side. When the vizier Al-Afdal saw this large sum of money, he said to Abû 'l-Barakât: 'By my father's tomb, if I hear of any well out of order, or of any land lying

In this church there is one altar, surmounted by a small baldakyn; and over the midst of the church there is one large cupola of conspicuous size. The church contains pictures of the forty martyrs of Sebaste; and beneath it is the tomb of the said Abū 'l-Fadā'il.

(10) Below this is the church of Saint John, the Baptist and Fore-runner, in a cave, and with a stone roof, supported on a pillar, like a house which is concealed. In the midst of it, and on the roof, are ecclesiastical paintings, most of which have been effaced. Near this church is the tomb of John the monk, who planned the walls of Cairo and its gates¹, in the caliphate of Al-Muṣṭansīr, and in the uncultivated, or of any village in ruins, I will cut off thy head!' to which the metwalli answered: 'Far be it from thee that in thy days any village should be ruined, or land left uncultivated, or well allowed to fall out of repair!' Al-Makrīzī confirms the statement of our author that Abū 'l-Barakāt was put to death in A.H. 528. See Khiṭāṭ, i. p. ፲. ፲.

What Abū Ṣalīḥ says is that John the monk planned the new walls of Cairo in the vizierate of Badr, under the caliphate of Al-Muṣṭansīr. The original walls, of brick, were built by Jauhar, under the caliph Al-Mu'izz in A.D. 969 or 970 (see Al-Makrīzī, Khiṭāṭ, i. p. ፲፻፻ ff.); but a century later these walls, being outgrown, were demolished by Badr al-Jamālī, in A.D. 1087, who extended the boundaries of the city, especially on the northern and southern sides, erecting new walls of brick, with gateways of stone (see Al-Makrīzī, Khiṭāṭ, i. p. ፲፻፻). In his learned essay on the topography of Cairo, M. Ravaisse gives a very clear plan, showing the walls of Jauhar and those of Badr. Saladin subsequently extended the citadel and made other enlargements, but in the main the existing walls are more probably those of Badr than those of Saladin. See M. Ravaisse in Mém. Archéol. de la Miss. Franç. au Caire, 1881-4; esp. plate 2 facing p. 454. (A. J. B.)

vizierate of Amîr al-Juyâsh Badr; over his tomb there is a marble slab in the wall¹.

The church of Saint George², which has already been mentioned among these numerous churches, is outside, on the peak of the mountain, and it was founded by the Shaikh Abû 'l-Hakam, brother of Abû 'l-Khaṣib, and relative of Abû 'l-Barakât ibn Abû 'l-Laith.

On this mountain there are many caves, hewn in the rock, which also forms their roof; one of them is the cave of Saint Arsenius, which was made for him, and it contains the stone which he used as a pillow. Within the monastery there is a cistern, which receives water from the mountain at the time of rain. There is also a well of springing water, hewn in the rock, of which the monks and their visitors drink. There is a mill hewn in the rock. The churches are likewise founded in the rock. Near the church of Saint Sabas, restored by Abû 'l-Barakât, there is a manzarah which was made for Al-Âmir, who came here in the hunting season; and there is a place for his attendants. There is here the manzarah of Khamârawaih, son of Aḥmad ibn Tûlûn, in the upper story of the monastery on the eastern side; it has now fallen into decay. The monastery now, in our time, contained five monks in poor circumstances, until the end of Barmahât, in the year 891 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1175). After that, Fakhr ibn al-Kanbar³, the misleader of the ignorant through his false creed, came to live there, with a body of his followers; and he dwelt there twenty years, until he died, on Monday, at the beginning of the White Week⁴, in the second week [of the Fast], on the 23rd of Amshîr⁵, in the year the chamberlains of Al-Ma'mûn¹ 'Abd Allâh, son of Hârûn ar-Rashîd, since it was near the 'Dome of the Air'², which he founded on the Muqâttam hills. The Christians wore black garments³, and rode on horses, until the caliphate of Al-Mutawakkil Ja'far, who forbade them to do so.

³ This legend is so far correct that the art of glass-making probably began in Egypt, and not, as it was stated by Pliny and those writers who have followed him, among the Phoenicians. ⁴ On the top of the Muqattam hills, to the east of Cairo. For the legends related of the spot, see Al-Makrîzî, Khitât, ii. p. 100.

Hulwân.

Fol. 52 b Hulwân⁴. 'Abd al-'Azîz⁵ ibn Marwân ibn al-Hâkam, surnamed Abû 'l-Uşbu', lived in this place, and Hulwân was the name of his eldest son. It was in this neighbourhood that Al-Imâm al-Hâkim bi-amri'llâh alighted from the ass which he was riding, and ordered his groom, who accompanied him wherever he went, to hough the ass; and he himself went alone into the inner parts of the desert and never returned; nor is it known to this day where he retired. This happened in the month of Shawwâl, in the year 411 (A.D. 1021)⁶.

² The Kubbat al-Hawâ was on the mountain near the citadel of Cairo; see C. Niebuhr, Voyage en Arabie, &c., i. p. 93. (A. J. B.)

At Hulwān 'Abd al-'Azīz erected some handsome buildings, and set up a Nilometer. He was attacked by the disease called lion-sickness, or elephantiasis, and he took many medicines, but the medicines did him no good, and so the physicians, in treating him, selected [Hulwān¹ as a residence for him]. This 'Abd al-'Azīz pulled down the Old Mosque at Miṣr, known as the foundation of 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣī, governor of Egypt, and rebuilt it, adding to its extent². At Hulwān he made a large lake, into which water flowed from springs in the hills, named the Muqāṭṭam hills, by an aqueduct which he constructed [from the hills] to the lake. Beside the latter he erected a pavilion of glass³.

'Abd al-'Azīz also built several mosques at Hulwān, and spent much money here. One copy of the history states that he spent a million of dinars here. He also planted palms and other trees here. He levied the land-tax several times in every week, fearing that a rebellion might arise and come upon him, and that then he would stand in need of money. He built the bridges over the canal of the Prince of the Faithful⁴. It was his wish to remove the seat of commerce by land and water to [Hulwān], and to depopulate Al-Fustāt. [In his time] Fol. 53 a the public treasury was at Hulwān.

§ There is a monastery adjacent to this last-named church. This Fol. 53 b is a large building, skilfully planned and constructed, and it contains a large number of monks and devout old men. A festival is kept in this monastery, on the 17th of Tûbah, every year, in memory of the two saints, so celebrated for their monastic life, Maximus and Domitius, his brother, the sons of the emperor Valentinian⁵, and superiors

See Al-Idrisî (ed. Rome) [pp. 47 and 113]; Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iv. p. 216; Amélineau, Geogr. pp. 395-397.

¹ Or John; he occupied the see from A.D. 677 to 686 (?), and was the predecessor of Isaac, and the fortieth of the Coptic patriarchs. See Renaudot, Hist. Patr. pp. 174-177.

⁴ The father of Ar-Rayyân according to most of the Arab historians; see above, fol. 18 b.

⁵ The form of the name is corrupt. The two saints are commemorated on Tûbah 17=Jan. 20. They are said to have been the sons of the emperor of the monastery of Our Lady, named after Baramûs¹, in the desert of Saint Macarius or Wâdî Habib.

It was the custom among Christian pilgrims to make a pilgrimage to these two saints three times in the year: namely, at the Feast of the Cross, on the 17th of Tût; at the Feast of the Bathing², on the 11th of Tûbah; and on the Monday of Easter; and the people manifested great joy on account of these saints, and held spiritual communion [with them].

The revenues of this monastery and this church, which are in the district called Dahshûr³, in the province of Al-Jiziyah, were composed partly of an income of money and produce, together with the endowments and votive offerings and other receipts. But this state of things was afterwards changed, and disappeared through the disappearance of the good people; and this church became a mosque, and was called the mosque of Moses; and the monastery was entirely inundated by the river.

Church of the Virgin.

Fol. 54 a § There is a church named after Mary, the Pure Virgin. It was restored in the patriarchate of Anbâ Isaac, the forty-first in the succession, by Gregory, bishop of Al-Kais. The bricks and timber of this church were taken away, at the time of the victory of the emir Valentinian I, and to have been devoted to pious exercises from their youth. After a pilgrimage to Nicaea, the scene of the Council, they determined to become monks, and finally they became disciples of St. Macarius in the desert of Scete. See Synaxarium ad diem. In the Bib. Nat. of Paris there is an Arabic life of the two saints.

Husain ibn al-Hâfiẓ and of the quarrel between the Raihâniyah and the Juyûhiyah¹, when many on both sides were killed. With the materials thus seized, the mosque called 'Mosque of the Hyena,' at Itfîh, was restored, in the lunar year 528 (A.D. 1134). The result was that this church was entirely ruined and fell to the ground.

Monastery of Saint Anthony near the Red Sea.

§ Itfîh received its name from one of the sons of Mâlik, son of Tadrâs, one of the sons of Mizraim; for most of the large towns are called after the names of their sons. [Itfîh] travelled towards the west, until he reached the [Sea of] Darkness², and beheld many wonders.

§ The monastery named after Saint Anthony³. This stands to the east of Itfîh, and to the south of Miṣr, and from it to the river Nile there is a distance of three days' journey through the desert of Al-Kulzum. The pure body [of Saint Anthony] lies at this monastery, buried in his cave¹, in which he used to pray; [the body] is walled up within. His church, named after him, stands upon the summit of the holy mountain.

² The Atlantic Ocean, called by the Arabs Aṣ-Zulmah or Bahr aṣ-Zulumât, was thought by them to be the western portion of the circumambient ocean. In these dark regions, curiously enough, is placed the Fountain of Life, of which Al-Khidr drank and so lives on to the Day of Judgment. (A. J. B.)

Fol. 54 b This monastery possesses many endowments and possessions at Miṣr. It is surrounded by a fortified wall. It contains many monks. Within the wall there is a large garden², containing fruitful palm-trees and apple-trees and pear-trees, and pomegranates and other trees; besides beds of vegetables, and three springs of perpetually-flowing water, with which the garden is irrigated and of which the monks drink. One feddān and a sixth in the garden form a vineyard, which supplies all that is needed; and it is said that the number of the palms which the garden contains amounts to a thousand trees; and there stands in it a large and well-built keep. The cells of the monks overlook this garden. The monastery possesses property and gardens also in Iṭfīḥ. There is nothing like it among the other monasteries inhabited by Egyptian monks. It is in the possession of Jacobite monks.

§ It was in the Egyptian desert that Anbā Andūnah, the Egyptian, appeared. He was also named Antonios, the Star of the Desert and Father of Monks³. He was the first monk who lived in the desert; and gives a rude plan which he says was taken from a 'MS. map of the country about them.' Quatremère has some remarks on the monasteries in Mém. i. p. 153 ff. In recent times, the late Mr. Greville Chester visited Dair Anṭāniyās, and published a short account of it in pamphlet form. Mr. Headlam, of All Souls College, went to the monastery of St. Anthony and thence, like Coppin, on foot across the mountains to that of St. Paul. (A. J. B.)

² The gardens are still celebrated for their fertility. They are watered by springs from the mountain, of a slightly brackish kind, and not by wells as are the gardens of the Nitrian desert. See St. Jerome, quoted above. (A. J. B.)

monks gathered together to him. He began the building of monasteries and the assembling of monks in them. This holy monastery [which has been described] was built in the reign of the emperor Julian the apostate, son of the sister of Constantine the believer, and in the Fol. 55 a reign of Sapor, son of Artaxerxes, son of Babek, the Sassanian.

¶ This great saint, Anthony, was the first monk who clothed himself in wool, and exhibited the monastic habit, and left the world and dwelt in the deserts. The angel of the Lord also appeared to him, and showed him how to wear the monkish habit¹, and taught him how he must act in dwelling in the desert, that he might be an example to other monks, who should imitate him and live according to his pure life.

¶ That emperor of whom we have spoken, I mean Julian, was slain by the martyr Mercurius², as it is related by Basil³, bishop of Caesarea, who saw the similitude of blood on the point of his lance⁴. According to the history of Sa'id ibn Baṭrīk⁵, who was patriarch of the Melkites, was born at Κοπᾶ or Κόπα near Heraclea, and where his life is given; Bibl. Magna Patrum, tom. ix. p. 729; Athanasius, Op. tom. ii. p. 450 ff.; Rosweyde's Vitae Patrum, s.v.; Sharpe's Hist. of Egypt, ii. p. 274, &c. (A. J. B.)

³ The story is not to be found in the works of St. Basil now extant in Greek.

this happened in the reign of Artaxerxes, in the year 580 of Alexander, or, according to another copy, in the year 554 of Alexander. The history of Maḥbūb al-Manbajī, son of Constantine, relates the same incident.

Fol. 55 b With [Anthony] also was Paul¹ the monk; and these two were the first who clothed themselves in woollen garments, and dwelt in the deserts. This was in the patriarchate of Dionysius², the fourteenth in the succession. In the time [of Anthony] also lived Athanasius³, the scribe, patriarch of Alexandria, and Saint Pachomius⁴, the Egyptian monk, and Basil, bishop of Caesarea.

In this district [of Itṣḥ]⁵ there are seven churches, of which six

Sozomen (vi. 29 and i. 13) mentions two Pauls, viz. (1) a saint who lived at Pherme, a mountain in Scete or the Nitrian desert. There were 500 monks with him. He prayed 300 times a day, and had a bag of pebbles by which to count his orisons—a sort of rosary. (2) Paul, called the Simple, who was a disciple of Anthony and who gave his name to the monastery of St. Paul or Dair Bālūs, as it is now called, a day's journey to the south of Dair Antāniyās. Abū Ṣalih's account of Dair Bālūs—a very scanty one—is given a few pages below. (A. J. B.)

² Occupied the see from A. D. 248 (?) to twelfth year of Gallienus, i.e. 264–5. See Renaudot, Hist. Patr. pp. 32–39. St. Anthony lived from A. D. 251 to 356.

³ Athanasius was a friend of St. Anthony. His life and writings are too well known to need special reference. (A. J. B.)

⁵ As the road to the monastery of St. Anthony started from Itṣḥ or near it, belong to the Copts and one to the Armenians ; this last is named after the martyr Saint George.

Monastery of Al-Jummaizah.

§ The monastery called the monastery of Al-Jummaizah¹ stands upon the bank of the blessed Nile. Adjacent to it there is a keep, and a garden, and a mill, and a wine-press. It stands near Dahrūt², and contained, up to our own time, thirty monks.

The Heretic Balūtus.

§ In the [aforesaid] monastery of Anbā Andūnah, or Antonios, there was a monk named Balūtus, learned in the doctrines of the Christian religion and the duties of the monastic life, and skilled in the rules of the canon-law. But Satan caught him in one of his nets ; for he began to hold opinions at variance with those taught by the Three Hundred and Eighteen [of Nicaea] ; and he corrupted the minds of many of those who had no knowledge or instruction in the orthodox faith. He announced with his impure mouth, in his wicked discourses, that Christ our Lord—to Whom be glory—was like one of the prophets. He associated with the lowest among the followers of his religion, Fol. 56 a our author speaks as if the monastery was in close connexion with the town ; see above, fol. 10 a.

² A town about twenty miles below Al-Kais, on the west bank, and not far from Al-Bahnasā ; see Yākūt, Geogr. Wört. ii. p. २८८ ; Al-Idrīsī (ed. Rome) [p. ११३]. It does not seem to be in existence now. As the place is at some distance from Al-Jummaizah, and on the opposite bank of the river, perhaps our author or his abbreviator has here confused two monasteries.

clothed as he was in the monastic habit, girded with the zuniyah and the *askim*¹. When he was questioned as to his religion and his creed, he professed himself a believer in the Unity of God². His doctrines prevailed during a period which ended in the year 839 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1123); then he died, and his memory was cut off for ever.

Churches at Al-Barnil and Saul.

§ In the district of Al-Barnil³ there is a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary. Beside it there is another named after the saint Abû 'l-Ārah⁴.

¹ I have already explained that by the askim is meant properly the σχῆμα ἀγγελικόν or angelic habit, but it sometimes denotes merely the leathern girdle, as Al-Makrizî says:

الأشكيم وهو سير من جلد فيه صليب يتوضع به الرهبان

'The askim, which is a leathern belt with a cross upon it, and with which the monks gird themselves.' (Khitât, ii. p. 508.)

The wearer of this girdle has, nowadays, for the time being to double his offices and make 600 daily prostrations. The order made by St. Pachomius for the monkish habit enjoined the use of a sleeveless cassock—χιτών ἀχειρίδωτος, a hood—σκέπασμα ορ κουκούλων, a girdle—ξώνη—the zuniyah of the text, and the ἀναθολεύς, which is defined as τοὺς ὄφρους καὶ τοὺς βραχίωνας ἀνέχων, and seems to have been a sort of scarf worn across the shoulders (Sozomen, iii. c. 14). But the Père Sicard seems to identify the angelic habit with this ἀναθολεύς. He says that the habit is a sort of 'pallium ou scapulaire' of leather, called the askim; that it falls from the shoulders over the back and chest and has four ends worked with crosses, and that these ends are disposed crosswise over the body in various fashions. (Nouv. Mém. des Missions dans le Levant, v. p. 150.) (A. J. B.)

² Or 'a Unitarian.' (A. J. B.)

⁴ I can only conjecture that this saint is the martyred priest of Shatnûf, Abâ 'Arî (ابا اوري), commemorated in the Synaxarium on Misrî 9=Aug. 2. See Hyvernat, Actes des MM. de l'Égypte, p. 202 ff. Cf. Amélineau, Actes des MM. coptes, p. 151.

In the district of Şaul¹ there is a church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary.

There is also a church named after the glorious and valiant martyr Theodore, the Eastern².

There is also a church to the glorious Saint John³.

Churches at Itfih.

Moreover in the district of Itfih, in the city and outside it, there were more than twenty churches ; but only ten of them remain to the present time. One of these is a church in the district of Bâlójah⁴, named after the Disciples, and enclosed within a fortified wall ; it has a garden, and a water-wheel attached to a well of fresh running water. [In this district is] the church of Saint Mercurius ; and a church of the Lady, which belongs to the monks ; and a church named after the valiant martyr Theodore ; and a church named after Saint Cosmas ; and a church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin ; and a church named after the saint Aba Jûl⁵ ; and a church of the martyr Saint ¹ On the east bank, to the south of Itfih ; the place is now included in the district of Itfih (Atfih), in the province of Al-Jiziyah, and in 1885 had a population of 3,184. See Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 48] ; Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch, iii. p. 450 ; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 296.

² This saint, whose festival is kept on Tâbah 12=Jan. 4, is very popular among the Copts. Amélineau, Actes des MM. p. 179 ff. ; Synaxarium, ad diem. He fought in the Roman army against the Persians together with St. Theodore of Shuṭb, with whom he is probably confused, and was martyred under Licinius.

⁵ Aba Jûl is without doubt a corrupt form of Aba Bajûl, the Coptic ΑΒΑΒΑΓΙΟΥΛ.

Fol. 56 b Mennas, called the 'Church of the Column,' over which is a sheet of metal, and to which many votive offerings are brought. The Melkites have a sanctuary in this last-named church, in which they celebrate the liturgy. There is also another church named after the martyr Saint Mennas, near the ancient temple¹.

§ There is another monastery in the desert, called the monastery of the Mule², containing many monks.

Monastery of Saint Paul near the Red Sea.

§ Within the desert is the monastery of Saint Paul³. It stands on the bank of the Salt Sea⁴, and between it and the monastery of Al-Jummaizah there is a journey of two days through the desert. Monks in priest's orders and deacons come from the monastery of the great Saint Anthony to the monastery [of Saint Paul] to celebrate πχωλ or πσώλ, the name of a celebrated hermit, the first teacher or religious superior of St. Sinuthius. See Zoega, Cat. p. 375; Amélineau, Mém. pour servir à l'hist. de l'Église chrét. au 4 et 5 siècles, p. 5.

² According to Al-Maḳrizī (Khitāt, ii. p. 51) this was another name for the monastery of Al-Kuṣair, in connexion with which our author has already told the story of the mule; see fol. 50 a.

the liturgy in it by turns. It stands in the Wâdî 'l-'Arabah¹, near the pool of Miriam ; and it is near Mount Sinai, but divided from it by the passage over the Salt Sea.

Al-'Artsh.

§ The region of Al-'Arish. In this region there are two large churches, which have stood here from ancient times, and are now in ruins, but their walls remain up to our own time ; and the wall of the city², which ran along the side of the Salt Sea, is still existing.

It is said that of all the marble and columns which are to be found at Miṣr, the greater part and the largest specimens came from Al-'Arish.

Al-Faramā.

§ The city of Al-Faramā. This city was built by Pharaoh³, on the river Nile, in the twenty-eighth year after the birth of Moses

² It is interesting to know that remains of the ancient Rhinocolura existed in the time of Abû Ṣalih. The columns at Miṣr would be mostly those used in the construction of the Christian churches and of the mosques. These columns were taken from classical buildings, and were not cut or designed during the middle ages. The use of columns for building is illustrated by the well-known story of Ibn Tâlûn and the Christian architect who built his mosque ; see Al-Makrizî, Khîṣat, ii. p. 110 ff., and S. Lane-Poole's Art of the Saracens in Egypt, p. 54. (A. J. B.)

the prophet ; and its name was taken from Faramûnus¹. It was exceedingly wonderful, and one of the most ancient of foundations of which there is a record. It is said that there was a way from this city to the island of Cyprus on dry land, but the sea covered it. The sea also covered the quarry of black and white marble of Gaza, and the quarry of white marble which was in Libya². There were at Al-Faramâ many churches and monasteries, which were wrecked by the Persians³ and the Arabs ; but it is said that the wall of the city remains to the present day.

§ The book of *Fadd'il Misr*⁴ relates that there was in the city of Tinnîs a governor called Ibn al-Mudabbar, who sent men to Al-Faramâ to pull down the stonework of the gateways on the eastern side of that city. But when those who were sent to extract the stones arrived, the people of Al-Faramâ went out armed to meet them, and forbade them to extract the stones, saying : ‘These gates are ancient and have never been injured by any king or any other man ; how then can we allow you to extract the stones from them, and take them away to another country ? It was through these gates also that Jacob, the father of and is put by Champollion at 3,000 yards. Abû Sâlih states above that the Arab town was on the sea (fol. 19 b) ; Al-Makrifî is evidently wrong in placing it at the distance of a day’s journey. Al-Faramâ was occupied by ‘Amr on his way to the conquest of Egypt. Subsequently it was refortified by the caliph Al-Mutawakkil about A.D. 853 ; and about 1117, as Abû Sâlih records, it was taken by Baldwin, king of Jerusalem, who, being unable to hold it, laid it in ruins and retired. See Hamaker, Incerti auctoris Expugnatio Memphidis, pp. 16, 17 ; Champollion, L’Égypte sous les Pharaons, ii. pp. 82–87 ; Quatremère, Mém. i. p. 259. (A. J. B.)

⁴ By Al-Kindî. Cf. Al-Makrifî (Khitat, i. p. 111), who quotes Ibn Kudaid.

the tribes, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham the Friend [of God]—upon them be peace!—made his entry¹; and if perchance one of the kings who believe in God shall undertake to restore the gates, then their stones shall be found safe and in their places.' So the men went away and did not displace a single stone.

Ishmael.

§ It was Útís², the son of Khartabâ, who gave to Sarah, the wife of Abraham the Friend [of God], her handmaid Hagar, in the thirty-fifth year of the life of Abraham; or, according to another copy, in the eighty-fifth; and the latter is the true date. By Hagar, Abraham became the father of Ishmael, who was called his son by Fol. 57 b Hagar; and the Arabs call Ishmael their ancestor, because he took a wife from among them; and they are called Ishmaelites, because Ishmael was their father, and because Ishmael grew up among the Arabs and spoke the Arabic language. Ishmael lived one hundred and thirty-nine years³. He had, by his Arab wives, twelve sons⁴, who

بَا بَنِي لَا تَدْخُلُوا مِنْ بَابٍ وَاحِدٍ وَادْخُلُوا مِنْ أَبْرَاجٍ مُّتَفَرِّقَةٍ

'My sons, do not enter by a single gate, but enter by different gates.' Cf. Al-Makrîzî, Khiṣâd, i. p. 111. Cf. the Midrash Rabbah on Gen., Par. 91 (quoted by Geiger, Was hat Mohammed aus dem Judenthume aufgenommen? p. 148):

אמור להם יעקב אל תכנסו כלכם בפתח אחד

'Jacob said to them: Do not all of you assemble at one gate.'

² We have here another of our author's digressions. Útís is the ancient king of Egypt who is named Afútís on fol. 22 b; see note there.

³ The Hebrew text and the LXX have 137 years.

⁴ See Gen. xxv. 13–15. The Arab writers naturally give somewhat corrupt forms of their names; see e.g. Ibn Ishâk quoted by Ibn Hishâm, Sîrah Muhammad, p. *

were great giants among the Arabs ; and they were the [heads of] tribes. And Nabish¹ was one of the sons of Ishmael. Now he, I mean Útís, dwelt at Al-Faramâ. His name is also said to have been Sâdûk. He built many cities, and called them by the names of his sons : such as Tinnîs and Damietta and Nûbah² and Dakahlah³ ; and he rebuilt Samannûd. It is said that Pharaoh built Al-Faramâ, which was a lake of water ; and a thousand boats were sunk in it, and the sea overwhelmed a thousand men, and therefore it was called *Alfa ramâ*⁴.

Cleopatra, queen of Alexandria, built the wall of *Al-Hujâz*⁵, on the eastern side of the country, from Nubia to Al-Faramâ, and on the western side from Nubia to Alexandria, to fortify herself against Augustus Caesar, emperor of the Romans, who captured Jerusalem, and carried the Jews away thence to Rome.

Invasion of Egypt by Baldwin I.

Sîrbâduwil⁶, king of the Franks in Syria, came to Al-Faramâ in

² Nûbah or ‘the Nubians’ is the name of a tribe, not of a town.

⁴ ‘It cast a thousand ;’ the etymology reminds us of Virgil’s derivation of Latium, ‘his quoniam latuissest in oris.’ (A. J. B.)

the caliphate of Al-Āmir and the vizierate of Shāhanshāh al-Afdal, in the fifteenth year of the patriarchate of Anbā Macarius¹, the sixty-ninth in the succession. This king of the Franks came with his troops and his army, and plundered the city, and burnt it. He made up his mind to march as far as Miṣr, in order to take possession of that city; but he fell sick at Al-Faramā on the third day after his arrival, and, as his sickness increased, he commanded his followers to carry him back to Syria. They did as he commanded them, and when he came near to Al-‘Arīsh he died; and so they embalmed him, and carried him back to Jerusalem, where he was buried.

Al-Kulzum.

§ Al-Kulzum² was the fortress of the king, on the frontier bordering upon the Hedjaz, and he named it after the cord of the weaver's stand, which holds the garment, and which is called *kulzum*³. Here is the church of Athanasius⁴. There is a monastery in the district of Rānah, founded by the emperor Justinian. At Al-Kulzum was the end of the canal from Cairo. Here, between the two seas, namely the Syrian Sea and the Sea of the Hedjaz, is the barrier or isthmus, which is the narrowest piece of dry land on the surface of the earth; and it is the land lying between Al-Faramā and Al-Kulzum, a distance of one day and one night's journey. A certain prince⁵ undertook to dig a canal between

these two places, in order that the two seas might be connected, the one with the other ; but he feared that the Romans might attack the shores of the Hedjaz with their ships.

§ Al-Faramâ is surrounded by a fortified wall of stone without gates, which is in a state of ruin.

§ It is said that it was in the sea of Al-Kulzum, which is the Red Sea, opposite to the monastery of Anthony, that God drowned Pharaoh and his host, and led the prophet Moses and the children of Israel over on dry land by twelve paths ; and some of them remain to this day, and witnesses to them are not wanting¹ ; and this sea is the *Bahr Sûf*².

Fol. 58 b § The history of Sa'îd ibn Ba'trîk, the Melkite, relates³ that the dearth was raging at Medina, near Mecca, and the people of Medina, of the Hanîfite religion, were in great distress ; so 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭâb, in the eighth year of his caliphate, wrote from the Hedjaz to 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî ibn 'Adî, emir of Egypt, to inform him of this. Then 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî sent to 'Umar a caravan of camels loaded with corn, for which the point of arrival was Medina, and the point of departure Miṣr. Then 'Umar wrote to 'Amr commanding him to dig a canal to Al-Kulzum, that thus the transport of the corn might be facilitated. So 'Amr dug the canal, which passes through Al-Ḳantarah, and is called the canal of the Prince of the Faithful ; and thus boats brought wheat and barley from Al-Fustât along the canal to Al-Kulzum, whence they barbarians, i. e. Phoenicians. But all ambiguity is removed by a passage in Al-Mas'ûdî (quoted by Quatremère, Mém. i. p. 175), who states that the caliph Hârûn ar-Rashîd contemplated making a canal across the isthmus, but was deterred by the representation that the Greeks would take advantage of it to gain command of the Gulf of Suez and attack the pilgrim ships on their way towards the holy places of Arabia. (A. J. B.)

were carried over the Salt Sea to Medina, which is the city of Afram, belonging to the diocese of Al-Kulzum, and the children of Israel built it for Pharaoh at that time.

It is said that the canal¹ of Cairo starts from the dam near [the island of] Rauḍah at Miṣr, and finishes at As-Sadīr, in the province of Ash-Sharkiyah, where there is a bridge, and where the wheat is transferred from the bank to the dealer who travels to Mecca and the Hedjaz.

Churches in the Province of Al-Jízah.

§ The western bank [of the Nile]. The province of Al-Jíziyah². Fol. 59 a
The fortress of Al-Jízah was built by 'Amr ibn al-Āṣi, in the year 22 of the Hegira (A. D. 43), and was completed for the Hamdān³. This last is [the name of] an Arab tribe who settled there at the time of the conquest of Alexandria.

¹ The present canal or khalij was doubtless the old Amnis Trajanus, and it starts from the Nile, as described, at the Fum al-Khalij, near the island of Raudah. Yákút (Geogr. Wört. iii. p. 51) speaks of As-Sadīr as a marshy district on the eastern boundary of Egypt, being the first place arrived at by one coming to that country from Syria; and he adds that he had visited the place himself. Abū Ṣalih means, I suppose, that the canal at the time of his writing, in the twelfth century, was still available for merchandise as far as As-Sadīr, from which point transport to the east had to be made by camel. The greater part of the canal was disused as early as the eighth century, when the caliph Al-Manṣūr is said to have filled it up. (A. J. B.)

In the western part of Al-Jīzīyah are the tombs of the kings¹ or Pharaohs, in which are their treasures, all traces of which have been effaced.

In this district [of Al-Jīzah] is the church of the martyr Victor, son of Romanus², on the bank of the river; it was built at the expense of Abū 'l-Khair aṣ-Šairafī, a native of Al-Jīzah. A light was seen to proceed from the picture of the Lady in the apse of this church on several occasions; and this thing became celebrated, and was talked of by many of the faithful who had witnessed it, and by other persons of authority. The foundations of this church were inundated by the river, so that it almost fell into ruin; but it was restored, and its foundations were strengthened, and an enclosure in the river was built for it, to give it strength, by the Shaikh 'Izz al-Kufāt Abū 'l-Fakhr ibn Sulaimān, the scribe, who spent much money upon it. This [shaikh] was celebrated in his time for his benevolence and his almsgiving. The Ghuzz and Kurds destroyed part of the aforesaid church; but God on this account performed a great wonder, so that they never attacked it again; and this was that by the end of the year not one of those who had attacked the church was living.

Fol. 59 b Adjacent to this church there is a garden. After a time the river gained upon the building; and the architects were unable to invent any remedy, so that the river carried away the eastern side of the building. Then Fakhr ad-Dīn, the wālī of Miṣr, known as Ghulām al-Bāniyāṣī, carried off eighteen pillars, marked with the sign of the cross³; and he built with them an inn and other houses for himself; but he was deprived of the governorship of Miṣr, and was fined soon after this, and all his property was seized to pay the fine; and he died during his imprisonment.

³ This allusion to consecration crosses cut or painted on the pillars is interesting. See Coptic Churches, i. p. 188, &c. (A. J. B.)

The house of Fakhr al-Kufât¹ stood by the river ; and he feared lest the river should destroy it, as it had destroyed the rest ; so he pulled it down, and carried away all the materials and the timber, and the timber of the roof of the church which has been described, with its materials, and rebuilt with them a church which had fallen into ruin, and which was named after Mark² the Evangelist. This building he made wider and handsomer than the former church ; and it remained for several years in good order, until the Ghuzz and the mob of Muslims attacked it and wrecked it ; and after that no one restored it again ; but its walls are still standing, in a ruined state, and it is deprived of liturgies and prayers. This destruction took place at the promotion of Anbâ John, son of Abû Ghâlib, the seventy-fourth patriarch.

¶ There is a church of Saint Peter at Al-Jîzah, on the bank of the Nile, the foundations of which are in the river. It was in this church Fol. 60 a that the Christians assembled, at a time when the Nile was slow in rising ; and they offered prayers on this account by night and by day, and fasted for the space of a whole week ; and at the end of the week God filled up the measure of the waters of the Nile, and they increased beyond that, after the rising of Arcturus, until they reached a height of seventeen cubits or more ; and the Life of Anbâ Michael states that they reached³ eighteen cubits ; and men ceased to despair of the

² Mentioned by Al-Makrîzî, and by the Copto-Arabic lists (Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 578 and 580).

وَلَا كَانَ السَّابِعُ وَالْعَشَرُ مِنْ تَوْتِ يَوْمِ عِيدِ الْمَلِيكِ الْمَجِيدِ جَمِيعَ كَهْنَةَ الْجَرَةِ وَالنَّزَهَاتِ وَأَكْثَرَ أَهْلِ الْقَسْطَاطِ وَالْكَبِيرِ وَالصَّغِيرِ مِنْ شَعَبَةِ وَحْمَلَوْا الْأَذْاجِيلَ وَمَبَارِكَ الْبَخْرَ وَدَحْلَنَا إِلَى الْبَيْعَةِ الْكَبِيرَةِ rising of the Nile. Then Nârûn, the wâlî of Misr, said : ‘ How does God receive the prayers of the Christians ? ’

At Al-Jizah there is also a church named after the angel Michael, near to which lies the village of Al-Khaizarâniyah. It was to this

‘ When the 17th of Tût came, which is the festival of the Glorious Cross, the clergy of Al-Jizah and of distant places assembled, with most of the lay people of Al-Fustât, old and young, and walked in procession carrying the Gospels and censers with incense. Then we entered the great cathedral church of St. Peter, the foundations of which lie in the river ; but the church could not contain the people on account of their multitude, so that they stood in the outlying places. Then the patriarch raised the cross, while Anbâ Mennas, bishop of Memphis, stood by him with the holy Gospel, and led us all forth, bearing crosses and books of the Gospel, until we stood on the banks of the river ; and this was before sunrise. And the patriarch prayed, and Anbâ Mennas, the bishop, prayed, and the laity did not cease crying Kyrie eleison until the third hour of the day ; so that all the Jews and Muslims and others heard our cries to the most high God. And he heard us, praise be to his glorious name ; for the river rose and increased in height by one cubit ; and every man glorified God and gave thanks to him. And when Nârûn heard of this matter he was filled with wonder and fear, both he and all his troops.’ (Paris MS. Anc. Fonds Arabe 139, p. 183, ll. 5-14.)

Cf. Renaudot, Hist. Patr. p. 230, where he wrongly says that the church of St. Peter was at Misr. Al-Makrizî also mentions the event.

The subsequent rise to the height of eighteen cubits is mentioned in the MS. just quoted on p. 180, l. 7.

church [of the angel Michael] that Anbâ Michael, the forty-sixth patriarch, came with the bishops who were his fellow-prisoners, when they were released from the hand of Marwân al-Jâdî, the last of the Omeyyad caliphs. Afterwards the river inundated this church, and not a trace of it remained.

§ The monastery named after the glorious martyr Mercurius. The church belonging to it was destroyed by the Khorassanians¹, when they were transported to the western bank of the river, in order to fight with Marwân, surnamed the Ass of War².

§ There is a church of Mark³, the evangelist and apostle, in the fort built by Khûsh⁴, king of the Persians, at the same time as the Kâṣr ash-Shâma' at Miṣr. The king used to alight at both of them Fol. 60 b from his boat.

§ The church of the angel Michael, also called the Red Monastery⁵, is on the bank of the blessed Nile. In this monastery there is a church named after Cosmas and Damian, which has a conspicuous dome of stone.

² This sobriquet alluded to his vigour and tenacity.

³ This must be the church already mentioned on fol. 59 b.

⁴ I. e. Artaxerxes Ochus. The name is shortened from اخوس, and the points over the ش are, of course, incorrect. Eutychius, after mentioning Artaxerxes Mnemon, says:

وَمَلَكَ بَعْدَهُ ابْنُهُ ارْطَخَسٌ وَسِمَا اخْوَسٌ

'And after him reigned his son Artaxerxes, called Ochus.' Further down Eutychius says:

وَبَنًا اخْوَسٌ مَلَكَ الْفَرِسِ بِفُسْطَاطِ مِصْرِ الْقَصْرِ الْمَعْرُوفِ الْيَوْمِ بِقَصْرِ الشَّمْعِ

'And Ochus, king of the Persians, built at Fustât Miṣr the fort which is now called Kâṣr ash-Shâma'' (Annales, i. p. 267.)

⁵ This must still be in the province of Al-Jizîyah, and is not to be confounded with the Red Monastery of Upper Egypt.

Al-Khaizarâniyah¹. Here is the church of Saint Poemen, [the garden of] which contains fruitful palm-trees and an arbour of trees².

¹ This village or district was, as we have been told a few lines above, contiguous to Al-Jîzah. Both the locality and its church of St. Poemen are named in the Copto-Arabic lists (Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 578 and 580), thus

³ اشتاب, put by a clerical error for انصاب, seems to denote trees, and is probably the Syriac بَحَّلَلْ.

§ Bunumrus² or Kasr Khâkân. There is here a church named after the holy martyr Saint George, which was restored by 'Ilm as-Şarf Abû 'l-Makârim al-Wizân bi 'sh-Shafâ'if; and within it there is a tablet of wood fastened with thread.

§ Bûlâk³. Here is the church of Saint George, beside which grows an ancient lotus-tree; and the church of the valiant martyr Theodore.

At Mukhnân⁴ there is a single church.

³ I. e. Bûlâk ad-Dakrûr. The suburb of Cairo named Bulâk was not founded until A. D. 1313; see Al-Mâkrîzî, Khitâṭ, ii. p. 111.

§ Wasîm². Here is the church of the Lady, restored by the priest George, of Upper Egypt, scribe of Al-Ustâdh Şandal al-Mużaffâri. It is said that there were at Wasîm 366 churches, in which the liturgy was celebrated every day, and to which priests and deacons were attached; at which also the laity congregated.

¹ See above, fol. 34 b. Near Mukhnân, and now included in the district of Badrashain, in the province of Al-Jîzah, with a population in 1885 of 2,935. Munâ (مني) is the plural of Munyah, and the place in question was sometimes called in the singular Munyat al-Amîr. Nevertheless M. Amélineau writes it 'Mâna al-Amîr' (مينا الامير), as if it were compounded with the Arabic مينا, 'harbour.' The modern pronunciation Mina (ميّن)، less correctly (منا) arises from the present vocalization of the singular as Minyah (منيّة). De Sacy transcribes the name as Mona al-Amîr. The place is called in Coptic ΜΙΝΑΩΝΗ ἡπαλλεερε. [there], and a native of the town of Nahyâ, when I visited the monastery in the month of Shauwâl, in the year 569 (A. D. 1173), at the feast of the holy Pentecost, in order to receive the communion there. He said that he had found, in a chronicle¹, the statement that this holy monastery was erected by a merchant, who had come to Egypt from the west, when he arrived at Miṣr² from the frontier district of Alexandria, before the reign of Diocletian, the unbeliever, who shed the blood of the martyrs, and commanded the people to serve idols, and slay victims for them, and offer them up to them, and burn incense to them. That merchant had come from the west forty years before these things happened.

When Al-Mu'izz li-dîni 'llâh came from Western Africa, and took possession of Egypt³, he encamped beneath the walls of this monastery, and stayed there seven months, and laid out in front of it a garden, with a well and water-wheel, at the foot of the hill to the west of the sycamore-tree, besides constructing a cistern for the convenience of travellers. This well is now filled up, and the cistern is disused. Subsequently [Al-Mu'izz] entered Miṣr. At the present day the garden is a waste, and there is nothing left in it except the roots of sycamores and lotus-trees.

Geogr. Wört. iv. p. 100; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 258. This was one of the monasteries of Egypt which were famous even among the Mahometans. There was an account of it in Ash-Shâbushtî's Book of the Monasteries, from which our author himself quotes on fol. 64 a and b, and which is also quoted by Yâkût, Al-Kazwînî and Al-Makrîzî. Quatremère gives a translation of our author's account of the monastery of Nahyâ (Nehia) in Mém. i. pp. 116-125, but with certain alterations and omissions. (A. J. B.)

² Memphis is often spoken of by the Arabs as Miṣr al-Kadîmah, or Ancient Miṣr.

³ Al-Mu'izz was great-grandson of the founder of the Fatimide dynasty at Tunis. Egypt was conquered by his troops in A. D. 969, and in A. D. 973 he himself arrived in Egypt. (A. J. B.)

Fol. 61 b Al-Hâkim caused this monastery to be burnt to the ground. Afterwards, however, it was restored by an official, a native of Wasîm in the province of Al-Jîziyah; and Al-Hâkim granted an endowment there to the monks, which has remained up to this day. The columns of this monastery, at its restoration, were constructed of granite.

Al-Âmir bi-âhkâmi [llâh] visited this monastery in the vizierate of Muhammed ibn Fâtik; but he found the doorway, which was closed by an iron door, too low for him¹, and as he would not consent to enter with bowed head, he turned his face to the outside, and his back to the door, and crouched down, until he had entered. Then he walked straight forward until he had entered the sanctuary. Then he said to one of the monks: 'Where is the place at which the priest stands?' So [the monk] showed it to him. Then the caliph said: 'Where is the place at which the deacon stands?' So the monk informed him where it was. Then Al-Âmir took his stand in the priest's place, and said to the monk: 'Stand opposite to me, in the place of the deacon.' So the monk did this. When the caliph had walked round the church, he gave to the monks a thousand dirhams, after receiving hospitality from them; and then he went out of the monastery to hunt, and did not pass the night in the monastery on that occasion.

The altar was approached by a descent of some steps, followed by an ascent², but the steps were removed by the Shaikh Abû 'l-Fadl, son of the bishop, who filled up the [hollow] place, and paved it. He also made a wall of masonry before the sanctuary upon three pillars of marble³.

After this, Al-Imâm al-Âmir began to pay visits to the monastery, with his retinue and troops, to hunt. He erected here a lofty manzarah, surmounted by a high cupola on the northern side [of the monastery]; its door was outside the monastery, but it possessed a staircase, constructed of stone, which was ascended from [within] the monastery. The door is now walled up.

The worms¹ did so much damage to this manzarah, besides other Fol. 62 a parts, that it fell, and not a trace of it was left.

The caliph Al-Âmir spent a night in the monastery on two separate occasions, and went out each day to hunt. He was entertained by the monks; and accordingly every time that he visited the monastery, he gave them a thousand dirhams, so that they received in this way twenty-five thousand dirhams, in good coin. The old wall [of their dwelling] had fallen to decay; and so the new enclosure which is now standing was built with that money. The number of the camels which carried the stone and the bricks to the monastery every day amounted to forty. Near the monastery, within the enclosure, and in its south-eastern corner, there is a well of running water, covered with a roof.

Then the monks, when they saw the great liberality of Al-Imâm al-Âmir, and began to allow themselves freedom with him, asked him to grant the monastery a piece of land which they might cultivate year by year; and he granted their request, and by a permanent deed of gift in his own handwriting gave to the monastery a piece of land in the district of Tuhurmus² in the province of Al-Jîziyah, and in their neighbourhood, of about thirty feddâns in extent, [to judge] without measurement; and this remained in their possession until the Ghuzz and Kurds conquered [the country] in the year 564 (A.D. 1169), and took this land away from the monastery, so that nothing was left to the words are difficult to understand. They seem to refer to an altar screen, although it is not easy to imagine any symmetrical arrangement with three pillars, the central one of which would necessarily come where the door should be, nor to picture a wall 'supported' in the manner described. monks except the fishing-pool, on the produce of which they make a profit.

Fol. 62 b One of the government scribes of Miṣr came to this monastery to ask for water to drink, and to wash his hands ; but he found the water there scanty in quantity, and so he caused a well to be dug within the enclosure, opposite to the southern wall of the church. Those who dug the well met with a rock [in the course of their work] and so he caused it to be cut through, at the cost of one dinar for every cubit, and the number of cubits amounted to fourteen ; and this was in addition to the money that he spent on the digging and fitting up of the well. It is this well from which water is drunk at the present day. May God rest the soul, and reward the intention of the founder ! The water which comes up from this well is sweet, good, light, and digestive.

§ The reporter of this narrative, whom I have already designated, said that the church of this monastery was named after Martha and Mary, the sisters of Lazarus, whom our Lord Jesus Christ raised from the dead, and who lived nine years after that, and became bishop of Cyprus¹ for a considerable time. The number of the Jews who witnessed the resurrection of Lazarus was 7,400 men, besides women and children. The reporter of this true narrative said to me : 'I used to receive counsel from the monk who was my spiritual father, and he informed me of all that you have heard from me, for he lived in this monastery, and met here with old men who told him all that I have told you. On a certain occasion I was about to behave irreverently in a place opposite the well ; but this old man forbade me, saying : "This place, my son, contains the tomb of Martha and Mary², which lie beneath it in a crypt¹ which was made for them." On this account I began to reverence that place, and to pray in it. One day I measured [the ground] from this place of which I have been speaking to the edge of the well, and found the distance to be eighteen cubits, and the distance from the place of the tomb to the southern wall of the church, including the distance to the well, [I found to be] twenty-nine cubits.

² Nothing is known in the west of the reputed relics of St. Martha and St. Mary in Egypt.

'God knows that I possess no means of erecting a cupola over their tomb, so that it might be known thereby !'

In this church there is a tank, into which the water flowed from that well which I have mentioned through a pipe, which was afterwards filled up. There is in the monastery a Persian mill, which contained an instrument for peeling off the bran, but this has now become useless. Near the church there is a large and lofty keep², consisting of three stories, which is entered from within the church by a flight of steps. This keep fell into decay, and so it was restored by the Shaikh Al-Makin Abū 'l-Barakāt, the scribe, known as Ibn Katāmah, who also restored the wall contiguous to the washhouse, below, and restored the pipe.

Near [the keep] there is a church named after the holy father Fol. 63 b Andūnah or Anthony, which has fallen into decay.

Outside and in front of the monastery there are a number of cells, which belonged to the monks when they came out from the monastery of Saint Macarius in the patriarchate of Anbā Benjamin³, the thirty-eighth in the succession, but which are now ruined.

³ It seems to have been in the patriarchate of Damianus, the thirty-fifth patriarch, that the monasteries of the Wādī Habib were pillaged by the Berbers, and they remained in a partly deserted condition until the Mahometan conquest in the time of the patriarch Benjamin, when they were restored. See the patriarchal biographies, Brit. Mus. MS. Or. 26, 100, pp. 95, 103, 110 ff. The

In the monastery there are two crypts : one of them near the church of Saint Anthony, for burying the bishops of Al-Jiziyah ; and the other under the keep, for burying the monks. There are also in the monas-tery places of burial for the villagers.

The worms destroyed the timbers of this monastery and the church ; and so they were pulled down at the expense of that *Sayyid*¹, who constructed instead of the roof [of timber] a vaulted roof, and enclosed the columns within piers [of masonry], and none of the columns remained visible, except the two ancient granite columns which [stand] in front of the picture of the Lady, the Pure Virgin. The wooden *Bustul*² remained, because it had been anointed with myrrh, which prevented the worms from injuring it.

The number [of the monks] who are assembled together in this monastery in our own time amounts to seven or less.

§ According to the Guide to the Festivals, composed by Anbâ Jonas, bishop of Damietta, every year, on the 30th of Ba'ûnah, the festival of Mary and Martha is kept, who are [buried] near the Two Pyramids, in the monastery known as the Monastery of the Dogs, the correct name of which is the Monastery of the Vinedresser³; but the Melkites burnt it, on account of their hatred towards the Jacobites. It is said that the bodies of these two saints and the body of Lazarus are at destruction of the church of St. Macarius and of the cells by the Arabs of Upper Egypt (عُثَان الصَّيْد) is commemorated on Barmûdah 1=March 27; see Synaxarium at that day.

² This sentence is left untranslated by Quatremère in quoting the passage, doubtless because he failed to understand it. The word Bustul has already been explained in connexion with a similar passage above, fol. 27 a. By the 'wooden Bustul' is meant a pillar painted with the figure of an apostle. (A. J. B.)

⁴ The translation of the relics of St. Lazarus from Cyprus to Constantinople is commemorated by the Copts on Bâbah 21=Oct. 18.

The Guide to the Festivals also states that the birth of the Lady [which took place] outside Jerusalem in the reign of Augustus Caesar, is celebrated every year on the 1st of Bashans¹, which is called the 'Id as-Sunbulah. In another copy of the Guide, the monastery of Nahyâ is said to be dedicated to the Lady.

This monastery formerly belonged to the bishop of Al-Jîziyah and the island of Miṣr, but the patriarch Anbâ Mark transferred it to himself; he was the seventy-third in the order of succession. He allowed the bishop to receive three dinars yearly from the revenues of the monks.

§ In the district called Nahyâ², in the province of Al-Jîzah, is situated the monastery which has been described above. It is surrounded by a wall, and the church which it contains, named after the Lady the pure Virgin Mary, was restored by a merchant who came from the West.

[The caliph] Al-Imâm al-Âmir bi-Aḥkâmi 'llâh used to come to this monastery and enjoy the country here; and he erected in it a manzarah, and restored the enclosing wall. The Canon of the Festivals states that the church of this monastery is named after Martha and Mary, the sisters of Lazarus, whose festival is kept on the 28th of Tûbah every year, or on the 19th.

The Book of the Monasteries, by Ash-Shâbushtî³, testifies that this monastery is one of the finest and most agreeably situated in Egypt, Fol. 64 b and that the view of it is most admirable, especially during the days of the high Nile, and of the sowing of seed. It has a canal, where

Church of Saft Maidûm.

Saft Maidûm². Here there is a church, common [to different sects], containing three altars: one of them, in the middle, belonging to the Copts, and named after the valiant martyr Theodore; the second belonging to the Armenians, and named after the glorious martyr Saint George; the third [dedicated] to the Lady, the Virgin Mary, and belonging to the Melkites.

² Or Saft Maidûn. Formerly in the province of Al-Bahnâsâ, but now in that of Banî Suwaif and in the district of Zawiyah, with a population in 1885 of 1748. See Yâkût, Mushârik, p. 111; Recensement de l'Égypte, ii. p. 279. The insertion of the passage referring to Saft Maidûm here, in the midst of a description of the province of Al-Jizah, is an illustration of the want of plan of the book in its present form.

Arabs the name was well known through the existence in Arabic of many treatises ascribed to Hermes Trismegistus; see Hâjî Khalfah (ed. Fluegel), iii. pp. 53, 424, 480, 592; iv. pp. 100, 465; v. pp. 39, 41, 157, 171, 247, 587, where works of Hermes are mentioned on such subjects as alchemy, talismans, the mystic use of letters, astrology, the philosopher's stone or elixir (= ἔιριον). The belief that the pyramids of Al-Jizah were built by Hermes, or that one of them was his tomb, was widespread among the Arabs, who, however, generally say that they derived it from the Sabaean; see Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch, iv. p. 969; 'Abd al-Laṭṭif, Mukhtaṣar (ed. White), p. 99; Al-Makrîzî, Khiṭâb, i. pp. 111-121; As-Suyûṭî, Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. pp. 14, 16, 40. (A. J. B.)

وَذُكْرٌ فِي الْكِتَابِ إِدْرِيسٌ إِنَّهُ كَانَ صِدِيقًا نَّبِيًّا وَرَفِعْنَاهُ مَكَانًا عَلَيْهَا

'Make mention of Idris in the Book; for he was truthful and a prophet, and we raised him up to a high place.' The last words, of course, refer to his translation to Heaven. See Al-Baidâwî, Anwâr at-Tanzîl, &c. (ed. Fleischer), i. p. 583.

Eutychius says that Enoch was called Idris by the Arabs (Annales, i. p. 30). Ibn al-Athîr says that Enoch (خنزير), the son of Jared, is the same as Idris the prophet; that he was the first of the prophets, and the first to write and to study the stars and to calculate; that the learned Greeks (علماء اليونانيين) call him Hermes the Wise, and hold him to be great; that he exhorted the people to repentance, and that God raised him up when he was 365 years old according to the Pentateuch (Al-Kâmil, i. p. 44). As-Suyûṭî says that Enoch, Hermes, and Idris are the same person (Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. 14). Hâjî Khalfah says that Idris, the son of Jared, the son of Mahalaleel, the son of Enos, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, was the originator of all the learning that existed before the flood—make pilgrimages to the two great pyramids, and say that Hermes is buried in one of them, and Agathodaemon¹ [in the other]. The Sabaeans come to the pyramids from Harran, on pilgrimage². There is not on the face of the earth a structure erected by the hand [of man], stone upon stone, higher than these two pyramids³, which are the tombs of Hermes and Agathodaemon. It is said that the area covered by each of the two great pyramids is twelve feddâns⁴; and in each of them there is a well, the site of which is not known.

Near this place there is a monastery, known as the Monastery of and the Threecold in Grace (الثلث بالعفة); and that he was the first to erect buildings, and was himself the constructor of the pyramids; see Lex. Bibliogr. ed. Fluegel, i. p. 63.

² As-Suyûṭî adds that they offer sacrifices and incense there.

There is also a third pyramid, besides the two former, the base of which is built of hard granite of variegated colour¹.

The monastery is near the pyramids, on the western side; and its church is called the church of Timothy² the monk, a native of Memphis, whose body is buried in it. His intercession was powerful in this church, so that those who visited it and prayed to God in the power of faith, gained their requests; and if any one were desirous of entering upon some undertaking, and asked God to guide him according to that which was best, God revealed to him in a dream the advantages which would result from his undertaking, or else warned him not to enter upon it. This is attested by the Book of the Histories of the Councils.

The Western Mountains.

§ At the foot of the mountain-range there is a town called Mastâyah³. At the foot of the mountains in [the province of] Al-

واما الثالث فينقض عنهما بنحو الرابع لكنه مني بحجارة العوان الاحمر المنقط الشديد
الصلابة ولا يبتر فيه الحديد الا في الزمن الطويل

'The third pyramid is less than the other two by about a quarter; but it is built of stones of red granite, which is spotted, and of extreme hardness, so that iron makes no impression upon it except after a long time.' (Mukhtaṣar, p. 92.)
(A. J. B.)

² This must be the martyr Timothy of ancient Misr (مصر القديمة), a name given to Memphis by Arab writers, who is commemorated on Ba'ūnah 21=June 15; see Synaxarium at that day. He was a soldier in the Roman army when the persecution of Diocletian broke out, and for proclaiming Christ before Arianus, the governor of the Thebaid, he was repeatedly tortured and at last beheaded. Such, at least, is the account given.

³ I transcribe this name conjecturally as Mastâyah because De Sacy names a town called Mesṭâyah in the province of Al-Gharbiyah. A few lines further down our copyist writes مستائة, Mastâyah (?).

Jizah there are fifty monasteries, flourishing and populous, which have been ruined and burnt by the heretics : [that is to say] at the hands of the Berbers of Western Africa, who do not know the truth, or obey the law, or distinguish between right and wrong. This western range of mountains is united with the mountains on the western bank of the Nile, but then branches off from them, until, after passing by Barca and the whole sea coast of northern Africa, it reaches the land of Baraghwātah¹ and the shores of the Sea of Darkness. In this western mountain-range is the city called Mastāyah, to which [in former days] they used to bring the dead bodies of the kings, with all their money and treasures ; and the greatest number of treasure-hunters haunt the environs of this city, which they call Dār Mānuwil.

Monastery of Ash-Shama².

Fol. 65 b § Munyat ash-Shammās² [or Munyah of the Deacon], namely, of Paphnutius, the novice, is to the west of Tamwah.

The monastery called 'Monastery of Ash-Shama'³ :

¹ See note on fol. 49 a, where the name is incorrectly written Ibn Ghawātah. See Ibn Khaldūn (vi. p. 11), where there is a mention of the tribe of Baraghwātah and their native country in north-west Africa.

² This place is said by Yākūt to be in the province of Al-Jizah, and to be also called Dair ash-Shama' or 'Monastery of the Candle.' Compare the name Kasr ash-Shama' and its supposed derivation from ~~ΧΑΛΛΙ~~, 'Egypt.' The revenue-lists of A.D. 1375 also name the place as existing in the province of Al-Jizah. There were two places of the name in the same province ; but there is now only one Mīt Shammās, which is in the district of Badrashain, in the province of Al-Jizah, with a population in 1885 of 883. See Yākūt, Mushtarik, p. ۲۰۵; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 221. The monastery of Ash-Shama' must have stood close to Munyat ash-Shammās.

§ This monastery is also called the 'Monastery of the Devils'¹, for the following reason. In the days of [the caliph] Al-Mustansîr, during the years of dearth, the monks deserted this building, which remained uncared for, so that cattle used to feed in it. Moreover certain figures used to issue forth from the monastery, and used to ride upon horse-back from nightfall to morning, and enter a certain ruined village. Thus the monastery received that name. Paphnutius² went and lived in this monastery alone, to take care of it. It was a small domed structure, and it was restored at the expense of the officials, until it assumed the form in which it is now. Paphnutius had visited Onuphrius, the saint and pilgrim³, and lived with him for a time; for whenever Paphnutius heard of a saint, he went to see him and received his blessing; and he was with Saint Onuphrius at the time of his death⁴. There was at the dwelling of the latter a single fruit-bearing palm-tree; so Paphnutius thought in his heart that he would live there in the place of Onuphrius. But God sent a violent wind, which lasted long and blew down that palm-tree, from which Onuphrius used to feed himself during his lifetime; and filled up with sand the well of water from which he drank. So Paphnutius went elsewhere, and every one who saw his form, thought that he was a disciple [of Onuphrius], although it was not so. Afterwards he became a dis-

The church in this monastery has three altars : the middle altar named after Saint Anthony ; the northern altar after Saint Sinuthius² ; and the southern after Paphnutius ; and the church is named after Saint Sinuthius. The liturgy is celebrated at the altar named after Saint Paphnutius, in the middle of the Fast of the Forty [Days], every year. It was in [this monastery] that he died ; and according to his biography, he died on the 15th of Amshîr (Feb. 9).

² Abû Shanûdah, in Coptic σενούττε or σενούτ, and, in the Graecizing form found in Coptic MSS., ΣΙΝΟΥΘΙΟΣ, Sinuthius, is the name of the celebrated monk who founded the White Monastery ; see below, fol. 82 b. He was the son of a peasant and was born at Shenalolet, which has been identified with Shandawil, to the north-east of Ikhmîm. He served in boyhood as a shepherd, and then came under the tuition of his uncle Apâ Pjôl (Απα Πιχωλ = اپا بچول), who trained him in the monastic life. Sinuthius is said to have been present with St. Cyril of Alexandria at the council held to condemn Nestorius. The death of Sinuthius is commemorated on Abîb 7=July 2, and is said to have taken place in the very year of the Council of Chalcedon, viz. A.D. 451. The discourses delivered by this saint were carefully preserved, and many attributed to him are extant at the present day. It is said that a copy of one of them was laid upon the tomb of St. Peter at Rome, and that the voice of the Prince of the Apostles declared that 'Sinuthius was the fourteenth Apostle, as Paul was the thirteenth.' See Synaxarium at Abîb 7 ; Zoega, Cat. pp. 375-502 ; Amélineau, Vie de Schnoudi and Monuments pour servir à l'histoire de l'Église Chrét. (A. J. B.)

Martyrs (A.D. 951), according to the stone on which its date is inscribed over the door of the keep. In this monastery was the body of Saint Paphnutius, who was the disciple of Saint Macarius the Great in the Wâdî Habîb, [lying] on a bed of leather within a coffin¹ above the surface of the ground. It is said that the body was stolen by Husain, son of the caliph Al-Hâfiẓ, by means of certain Arabs. The monastery fell into decay a second time, and was restored by Anbâ Gabriel, the seventieth patriarch, known as Abû 'l-'Ulâ Sâ'id ibn Tarîk, in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiẓ. It is a famous monastery, and contains many monks. In front of it there is a large keep, which is entered from the church; and there are also handsome manzarahs in it. It possesses a garden, and land, and houses at Munyat ash-Shammâs, bought by the tribe of Banî Sûrus from the ancestors of the Shaikh Muṣṭafâ 'l-Mulk Abû Saff Ya'kûb ibn Jirjis, who were natives of Damîrah², in the north of [the province of] Al-Gharbiyah.

This monastery was under the see of Memphis and Tamwaih; but it became patriarchal. To it is brought the chrism³, and it

² The Coptic  ; now included in the district of Sharbîn in the province of Al-Gharbiyah, with a population in 1885 of 3,185. See Amélineau, Géogr. p. 118.

³ The Arabic mîrâd (میراد) transcribes the Greek μίραν, and denotes ‘chrism.’ The chrism was originally consecrated at Alexandria, but about A.D. 390 the place was changed to the monastery of St. Macarius in the Nitrian desert; see Coptic Churches, ii. pp. 333–334. This passage of Abû Ṣâliḥ is well illustrated by Renaudot (Hist. Patr. pp. 354–355), who relates that, during the great famine in is consecrated there. The roads are dangerous, and this course was found necessary. Anbâ Mennas, the sixty-first patriarch, built an altar named after Saint Mark, at Mahallah Dâniyâl, where the patriarchs lived; and the chrism was placed upon it for fear of the dangers of the roads, from the time of the dearth at the beginning of the caliphate of Al-Mu'izz in Egypt.

Other Churches of the Province of Al-Jîzah.

§ Munyat ash-Shammâs¹. In this district there is one church.

§ The district called Aş-Şarâf lies to the west of the monastery of Ash-Shama', and here resided Anbâ John ibn Abû Ghâlib, the seventy-third patriarch, who occupied the see for twenty-eight years. To the west also of the monastery of Ash-Shama' there is a church named after the glorious martyr Theodore.

Damûh². Here is the church of Cosmas and Damian, their brethren and their mother, which was restored by the Shaikh Abû Sa'id, the scribe, who was a member of the Dîwân al-Mukâtabât. Near it there the time of the caliph Al-Mu'izz, great numbers perished and many episcopal sees were vacant; and that the patriarch himself was forced to remain in Lower Egypt, and was supported with his followers by a wealthy lady at a village called Mahallah Daniel. (A. J. B.)

² Our author seems to imply that this place is in the province of Al-Jîzah, and Al-Makrîzî, who calls the place Damûh as-Sabâ', and names the church of Saints Cosmas and Damian as well as the synagogue there, actually states that it is in that province. 'Abd al-Laṭîf also states that Damûh was in the province, and near the town of Al-Jîzah. At the present day there is a Damûh as-Sabâ' in the district of Dakarnas in the province of Ad-Dakahliyah. Could our author, 'Abd al-Laṭîf and Al-Makrîzî, who are not always good geographers, have made a mistake? Could the mistake have arisen from the similarity of the names Damûh and Tamwâih which is next named? The latter place is sometimes called Ṭamûh. See also Quatremère, Mém. i. pp. 137-138.

is a garden containing a well with a water-wheel, upon the high road. The Jews have in this district a synagogue¹, enclosed by a wall, Fol. 67 a within which are lodgings for them, and a garden in which are trees and palms, and a circular well with a water-wheel. Here disputes took place between the sects of Rabbanites and Karaites concerning the lighting of lamps. It is said that the prophet Moses, in the days of Pharaoh, visited this place, and prayed in it, and slept in it².

Monastery and Churches of Tamwaih.

Tamwaih. This place is opposite to Hulwân³, which lies on the eastern bank. The monastery which takes its name from Tamwaih is described in the Book of the Monasteries of Ash-Shâbushtî⁴. It is surrounded by an enclosing wall. Its church is named after Saint Mercurius⁵, and overlooks the river, to which it is close. Contiguous to the monastery there is a keep, entered from the church ; and in its upper story there are fine manzarahs. The monastery commands views of the gardens and trees and cultivated lands and vineyards with trellises. It is inhabited by many monks.

This monastery was restored by the Shaikh Abû 'l-Yaman Wazîr, metwallî of the Diwân of Lower Egypt, and by the Shaikh Abû 'l-Mansûr, his son, in the caliphate of Al-Âmir, and the vizierate of Al-Afḍal Shâhanshâh. The latter used to alight at this monastery,

² 'Abd al-Laṭîf states that Moses lived at Damûh in the province of Al-Jizah ; see Al-Mukhtaṣar, ed. White, p. 116.

⁵ Tamwaih itself is often omitted in maps, but a monastery of Abû 's-Saifain, i.e. St. Mercurius, is marked on Norden's Plate XXVIII, nearly facing Hulwân and overlooking the river. (A. J. B.)

and spend some time there, lounging and sauntering ; and he laid out a garden near it, and planted in it trees of all sorts, and palms ; and dug wells over which he placed water-wheels ; and he surrounded

Fol. 67 b the garden with a strong hedge. The annual rent which was received from this monastery into the public treasury amounted to ten dinars. Afterwards this rent was stopped, and with the money oil-presses were built within the enclosure of the monastery, complete in all their parts. The monastery possessed forty-seven feddâns of land, which were appropriated by the Ghuzz and Kurds and the rest, in the reign of An-Nâṣir Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb, the Kurd.

In the church lies the body of Paphnutius¹, the superior of this monastery ; and his festival is kept on the 15th of Amshîr. The monastery contains a painting of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary. Al-Afdal took pleasure in sitting in his place in the upper story of the building.

The Shaikh Abû 'l-Yaman, who has already been mentioned, provided for this church, at his own expense, vessels of solid silver. He provided a paten², and a chalice, and a spoon³, and a censer, and a cross, and a splendid veil of silk.

In this district there is also the large and beautifully planned church of the glorious saint and champion Saint George.

There is also a church named after the female martyr Mahrâbil⁴.

² The curious enlargement of the denotation of the word ṣintyâh (صينية) is remarked upon by De Goeje, in his note on Ibn Ḥankal, p. 111, where he points out that from signifying a china (Chinese) plate or dish, it grew to denote a plate or dish of any material ; so that a porcelain dish had to be distinguished as صينية الصين or صينية صيني. For the use of the names of church vessels and furniture at the present day, see Coptic Churches, ii. p. 37 ff. (A. J. B.)

⁴ So in the MS. I can only conjecture that the name may be a clerical error

And the church of Abâ Bîmah.
 And a church named after the angel Michael.
 And a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin.

Memphis.

Memphis¹. Baisur, son of Ham, son of Noah, settled here, when he was 780 years old, with thirty of his sons and family, and therefore the place was called Manâfah², which means 'thirty.' His sons were Mizraim and Fârik and Bâh and Mâh. The following were the sons of Mizraim: Kifî; Ushmûn, the meaning of whose name is 'Come not hither'³! and Atrib. At this place⁴ there is a great image of granite, called Bâ'l-Hâl, thrown down upon its side. Fol. 68 a Afterwards Manâfah was established as the capital of the Pharaohs. When Baisur died he was buried here, in a place called Abû Harmîs; and he was the first to be buried in the land of Egypt. The Nile gradually changed its bed in that direction.

Other writers say that Memphis was built by Mizraim for his son Kifî, who was called Barîm; and others say that this city was built by Mansâ'ûs, the son of 'Adîm, who made it thirty miles long and twenty miles broad, and erected around it thirty towers, each tower for Maharatî, a girl whose martyrdom is commemorated on Tûbah 14=Jan. 9; see Amélineau, Actes des MM. p. 67.

³ The Coptic ይ&ለ&ጥ.

containing a bath, in the days of Sârû', son of Ar'û; or that it was built by Pharaoh, surnamed the 'Lover of his Mother'¹, who was king of the Pharaohs.

Joseph the Truthful constructed a large Nilometer at Munaif²; and he was the first who measured the Nile in Egypt by the cubit. At Memphis there are wonders: buildings, images, tombs, treasures, that cannot be numbered. There is here a house of green granite, hard, variegated in colour, all in one piece, square, with a roof of the same piece. The church near to this is spread with mats.

Fol. 68 b At Memphis there is a church which has been restored at a place which is said to be the place where Moses lay in ambush for the Egyptian and killed him, as it is related in his history. Every [square] cubit of the land here used to fetch a price of a hundred dinars. Near the town are the pyramids, three in number. The height of the great pyramid is four hundred cubits. The pyramids were the landmarks and the dwelling-places built by Aşghûsa, the greatest of all the kings of the earth, and by Arghâsh, the brother of Shaddâd, and by Shaddâd, son of 'Âd, and Mâlik, son of 'Âd, and Farmashât, brother of 'Âd, whose ancestor was the king Arzakûshâ. He built here eight hundred courses, and then died. In these high towers, which are the two great landmarks, [these kings] placed their treasures and their tombs. The riches contained in one of them were extracted by one of the emperors of the Romans, named Severus, or the Great; and he extracted [it], after four hundred courses, during his whole reign, until he died, in the time of the author of the treatise³.

Near these pyramids is the great image of granite [called] the Terrific⁴, sunk in the sand up to its middle.

² Memphis.

³ This passage appears to be incomplete or corrupt.

⁴ I. e. the Sphinx, generally called Abû 'l-Hâl; see last page. It was held by the Arabs to be a talisman, the purpose of which was to prevent the sands from encroaching upon the inhabited districts. Stories were told of its having been

After this we will speak of the Southern Provinces of the land of Egypt.

Churches of Bûṣṭr Banâ and other places.

Bûṣir Banâ¹. This town is named after a sorcerer, called Bûṣir, Fol. 69 a who lived there, for which reason it was named after him. In this town is the large church which was entirely built of hard stone, and is named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; it stands within the fortress of this city. The church was erected in ancient times; but as time passed by, and the kings stood in need of the stone of which it was composed, the greater part of it was carried away; and the church is now dismantled, although its architectural features are still visible. It stands near the prison of Joseph the Truthful, son of Jacob, son of Isaac, son of Abraham, the Friend [of God]—upon them be peace!

In the district of Banâ there is a church named after the great Saint George.

Munyat al-Ḳâ'id. Here there is a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, which was restored by the Shaikh Muṣadḍal ibn aş-Şâliḥ, a friend of the vizier Abū 'l-Faraj ibn Killis, in the caliphate of Al-Ḥâkim. He also restored a church on the banks of the blessed Nile, which stood for a time, but then the river inundated it, and washed it away, so that no trace of it remained.

Wanâ Bûṣir. Here there is a church named after the great martyr Saint Mercurius; and a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; and a church of the holy martyr Saint George; and a church of the great angel Michael; and a church of the martyr Saint John², whose pure body lies within it.

wilfully mutilated, which diminished its talismanic power. See Al-Makrifîzî, Khiṭat, i. p. 111. It is well known that the Sphinx is hewn out of the living rock, which is limestone, not granite. (A. J. B.)

² بُوش seems to be a clerical error for بَخْرُوس; see above, fol. 18 a.

Fol. 69 b Idrījah, one of the villages of Būsh. Here there is a church named after Saint George.

Tansā. Here there is a church named after Nahādah; and a church named after the martyr Mercurius; and a church named after Gabriel the angel; and a church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin.

The Fayyūm.

Madīnat al-Fayyūm¹ and its province. Al-Fayyūm was the name of one of the sons of Kift, son of Mizraim, who built this city for a daughter of his, who had offended, so that he banished her thither. Al-Fayyūm existed before the time of Joseph, son of Jacob, son of Abraham, the Friend [of God]—upon them be peace!—but it fell into ruin; and Joseph the Truthful restored it, and constructed the Nilometers, and built Al-Fayyūm, and Hajar al-Lāhūn, which was built with wisdom, and founded with strength, and help that came from God, and was executed by the inspiration of God—to whom be praise! Joseph also dug the canal of Al-Manhī, and cultivated the land of Egypt. The number of village-districts in [the Fayyūm] amounted to 360, which is the number of the days of the year, each village corresponding to a day; and the revenue from each district amounted to a thousand dinars. The lands of this province are irrigated by [a rise of the river amounting to] twelve cubits, but they are not overwhelmed by a rise of eighteen cubits, which is a great wonder. There is here common land which is not the property of any one, but all men have a right to demand a share of it according to their circumstances; and the common land consists of seventy different sorts. The revenue in the days of Kāfūr al-Ustādh, emir of Egypt, known as Kāfūr al-Ikhshidī, under the dynasty of the Abbāsides, when the province was administered by Ibn Tarkhān, in the year of the Arabs 355 (A.D. 966), amounted to 620,000 dinars; and this is as much as the revenue of Ar-Ramlah, Tiberias, and Damascus.

In this province there were thirty-five monasteries. The bishop, under the patriarchate of Anbâ Theodore, the forty-fifth in the succession, was named Abraham; and the land-tax paid into the public treasury upon the cultivated lands belonging to these monasteries amounted to 500 dinars.

According to the Book of the Conquest of Egypt by 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣṭ, it is said that the Fayyûm was also called the Waste Land, and was an outlet for the superfluous waters of Upper Egypt; so Joseph the Truthful carried them off by digging the canal, to receive the water of the Nile, which then began to flow into it. The age of Joseph was thirty years in the reign of Ar-Rayyân, son of Al-Walîd, son of Dauma¹, after his interpretation of the dream which the king saw. When Joseph interpreted this dream, the king gave him a royal robe, and the signet-ring of the kingdom from his hand, and entrusted him with the administration of the kingdom, and was distinguished from him only by ascending the throne. When Joseph dug the canal and admitted the water into it, it flowed from Râs al-Manhî until it reached Al-Lâhûn, through a break in which it flowed into the Fayyûm, which it irrigated. The canal contained a great mass of water, but was the work of no more than ninety days. When the king and his Fol. 70 bviziers saw it, they said: 'This is the work of a thousand days¹;' and so it was called Al-Fayyûm. And Joseph made the streams of two sorts, streams that ran down for the raised grounds, and streams that ran up for the depressed places, at certain times and hours of the night and day; and he framed meters, so that no man could take more water than his due.

The first city built by Joseph in the Fayyûm was Shânah², where the daughter of Pharaoh lived. Afterwards he measured the land and the water, and from him the science of geometry was first learnt. Joseph was the first who measured the Nile in Egypt by the cubit, and made a Nilometer at Memphis. Afterwards the old woman

² So also Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch. iii. p. 1rr, where he also gives a second form Shanânah.

Dalûk¹ founded a Nilometer at Ansinâ², and a Nilometer at Ikhmîm³; and 'Abd al-'Azîz ibn Marwân set up a Nilometer at Hulwân⁴. In later times the province of the Fayyûm was settled as a fief upon the Ghuzz and Kurds, in the reign of Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb, the Kurd; and so it remained until the end of the year 573 (A. D. 1178), when its revenues were 133,274 dinars. Then it was settled upon Bûrî, the brother [of Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb], and his followers, in the year 576 (A. D. 1180), when its revenues were 100,046 dinars. Then it was settled upon Takî ad-Dîn 'Umar ibn Shâhanshâh, and the son of his sister, in the year already mentioned, when its revenues were of the amount given above.

In Madinat al-Fayyûm⁵ at present there is the church of the glorious Fol. 71a angel Michael, which is exceedingly large, and contains certain pillars, large and high, so perfect that few more perfect have ever been seen. This church stands near that gate of the city which is called the gate of Sûrus.

There is also a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, outside the city; and there is a church of the martyr Mercurius, restored by the Shaikh Abû Zakarî.

¹ Generally called دلعة. She was said to have been queen of Egypt in her own right in remote antiquity.

² The ancient Antinoe or Antinoupolis, founded by the emperor Hadrian in memory of Antinous. In Coptic it is called ሂንቲኖስ. Under the later Roman Empire, it was the capital of the Thebaid, or Upper Egypt. Upon the site of this city now stands the village of Shaikh 'Abâdah, included in the district of Mallawî, in the province of Asyût, and having in 1885 a population of 1,179. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. ۱۸۱; Al-Makrîzî, Khiṣâṭ, i. p. ۱۴۶; Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 48–51.

³ The Greek Chemmis or Panopolis, and the Coptic ϕειν. It is now in the district of Suhaj, and had in 1885 a population of 18,792. It was formerly famous for its ancient temple, which was reckoned among the wonders of Egypt, but of which few remains now exist. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. ۱۱۰; Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 48]; Al-Makrîzî, Khiṣâṭ, i. pp. ۱۱ and ۱۲; As-Suyûtî, Husn al-Muhâdarah, i. p. ۱۸; Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 18–22.

⁵ This passage is quoted by Quatremère, Mém. i. p. 411.

There is also a church of the Melkites in the quarter of the Armenians.

Monastery of An-Naklūn.

The monastery called the monastery of An-Naklūn¹ lies to the east of the district called Nawasā². This monastery³ contains a church named after the angel Michael, in which there is a pillar of marble, which sweats as if water were flowing from it; and also possesses a large keep, which overlooks a mountain on which there is a boulder. It is said that the foundations of this church were laid on the 13th of Hatūr, and that it was consecrated by the Lord Christ and his Apostles on the 18th of Abīb. Adjacent to the monastery there is a church named after the angel Gabriel⁴, enclosed within a wall which was erected before the church on the 13th of Amshīr and was finished in this short time; and the building of the church was begun on the 26th of the same month, and finished on the 13th of Ba'ūnah, on the 20th of which month it was consecrated. It is said that the mountain called An-Naklūn is that which contained the place where Jacob, son of Isaac, son of Abraham, enjoyed the shade, and worshipped; and sacrifices were offered to God there in the days of Joseph, the son

Fol. 71 b

¹ The Coptic Μεκλωπε. This monastery was also called in Coptic Σεοπαστηριον οἴνηγε, and sometimes in Arabic دير الخشب, both of which names signify 'Monastery of the Log' or 'Beam.' It was situated to the south-west of Maḍnat al-Fayyūm, near the modern Gharāk, and has now been swallowed up by the sands, like the other villages of that district. Al-Maḳrīzī gives an account of the monastery of An-Naklūn. See also Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 133 and 273. (A. J. B.)

² Yākūt mentions a place of this name, which was, however, in the province of Samannūd, and still exists; see his Geogr. Wörterbuch, iv. p. 444, and Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 264.

of Jacob, when Joseph superintended the building of the Fayyûm and the Hajar al-Lâhûn. The church in the mountains of An-Nâklûn was consecrated, in the episcopate of Anbâ Isaac, by Aurâ, son of the queen's daughter and of Abrâshît¹, the magician, whom she hid away from him (?) and from her parents.

Monastery of Al-Kalamûn².

§ The monastery called that of Al-Kalamûn. This monastery is much visited. It possesses land in several districts of Upper Egypt; and at Shubrâ it owns sixteen feddâns. It possesses³ salt-marshes, from which it annually receives nearly three thousand ardebs [of salt]. Of the dates of the palm-trees it receives a quantity, which are sold every year.

There is here a spacious church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, which was consecrated on the 14th of Hatûr. Anbâ Samuel⁴, the superior and administrator of this monastery, was

³ This passage and part of the following account of the monastery are quoted by Quatremère, i. pp. 474-475.

⁴ The death of this saint is commemorated on Kîhak 8=Dec. 4. See Synaxarium at that day. He was the founder of the monastery of Al-Kalamûn, and Hatrî and Hor are said to have been monks there under him, which would fix his date in the first half of the fourth century. Fourteen monks from An-Nâklûn are said to have come over to Samuel. He employed his monks in preparing salt from the saline pool (~~ελατηρίον~~), mentioned by our author below. See Zoega, Cat. pp. 545-546, where quotations from a Coptic encomium on this saint are given.

a learned man; and God revealed to him what would happen in the future, and spoke with him; and Samuel wrote down what God said to him, and his prophecies were verified in his own time.

This monastery is enclosed within a surrounding wall, in which there is a large garden containing palms and olives and vegetables. In the monastery there are four towers; and it contains twelve churches. In the upper part there is a sentinel's cell in which a monk is stationed, to warn the other monks of the approach of visitors to the monastery, Fol. 72 a while the latter are yet at a distance, whether they be soldiers or emirs or wâlis; and the sentinel strikes the wooden gong in different manners, according to the rank of the visitors; so that the monks may know, when they hear it, who it is that is approaching the monastery, and may prepare what is fitting for him before he arrives.

The church of this monastery contains twelve chapels in its upper and lower stories. There is in it a spring of salt water, flowing day and night from it into a wide pool. In the latter there are to be found at intervals [the fish called] bult¹, of which men eat, and which are good for food, and black in colour. In winter the water sweetens a little in this pool; and the monks occasionally drink from it.

Outside the monastery there is a cave, in which lives a monk who is named Muhnâ; and he never quits it by night or by day. He fasts during the whole week. The monks go to him to receive his blessing. Around his cave there are many fruitful palm-trees. He used to have with him a hundred dinars of money; but when the Ghuzz and Kurds came to this country, he made a present of the money to the monks, and retained nothing of it. The wild beasts used to come together to him, and not one of them hurt him; but they grew so tame that he was able to feed them out of his hand. The devils also appeared to him, and stood opposite to him, face to face, but could not reach him.

Fol. 72 b The door of this monastery is plated with iron, and is of skilful workmanship.

This monk, Muhnâ, of whom we have been speaking, made, at the beginning of his monastic life, before he shut himself up in the cave on the mountain, a church which was hewn out of the rock, and over it he made cells for the monks. It is said that the father, Anbâ Samuel, the celebrated administrator of this monastery, used to worship on the mountain, at a place called Rayân¹, opposite to the monastery. Up to the end of Amshîr, in the year 894 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1178), the number of monks in this monastery amounted to 130; and they were virtuous and devout.

Monasteries and Churches at Aflâh az-Zaitûn.

The monastery of the glorious martyr Theodore, on the [canal of] Al-Manhî, at Aflâh az-Zaitûn². This Theodore was a native of the Fayyûm, and was martyred in Upper Egypt. His body was carried on a wooden chariot, over which his blood flowed; and it did not cease to carry him until it reached this district, of which he was a native.

In [this district] there is a church named after him, and containing his body; besides many other churches. There are here a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; a monastery named after the apostles; a church named after the martyr Mércurius; a church of the angel Gabriel; a church named after Saint John; and the church of the Saviour³.

² More commonly called simply Az-Zaitûn, or 'The Olives;' in Coptic Φ&ΝΙΧΩΤ. The Acts of the martyr John of Phanijoit have been published by M. Amélineau; see Un Document copte du xii Siècle, 1887. The place is on the west bank, close to Dalâs and Bûsh Kurâ, and a little to the north of Banâ Suwaif, to the province of which it belongs; and in 1885 it had 1,300 inhabitants, besides sixty-two Bedouins. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörter. ii. p. 110; Ibn Dukmâk, v. p. ۱; Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 327-330. This passage of our author is quoted in substance by Quatremère, Mém. pp. 412-413.

³ As-Sufr is of course the Greek σωτήρ.

Churches of Fânu and Nakalifah.

The district of Fânu and Nakalifah¹. In these two districts there are several churches. There are to be found here the church of the glorious Saint George; a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, restored by the Shaikh Al-Muhadhdhab Abû Ishâk Ibrâhîm ibn Abû Sahl al-Mushârif, who was known as Az-Zâkrûk; the church of the glorious angel Michael; the monastery of the Cross in the district of Fânu, in which the liturgy is celebrated once in the year, on the feast of the Cross; and a church of the glorious Saint George.

Sailah.

In the district of Sailah² there is a monastery named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin, the Virgin Mary; adjacent to which there is a keep, which has been restored, but not finished, on the public road.

The monastery known as the monastery of the Brothers. In this there is a church named after the glorious martyr Saint Mennas. In this monastery lived the priest John of Samannûd³, who was devout, learned, and humble, and consoled by his learning all those that came to him and heard his discourse; he afterwards became patriarch of Alexandria.

² Quoted in Quatremère, Mém. i. p. 413. Sailah was in the Fayyûm, to the west of Nakalifah, but is not named in the Rec. de l'Égypte. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iii. p. 11.; Ibn Dukmâk, v. p. 1.

Hajar al-Lâhûn.

Fol. 73 b Hajar al-Lâhûn¹. Here is the monastery of Saint Isaac²; and the church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary. This church is spacious and beautifully planned, skilfully built and designed, and resembles the church in the monastery of Al-Kalamûn. In the [monastery of Saint Isaac] there is also a small church, named after the glorious martyr Saint Isaac. Round this monastery there is a triple wall of stone. It is much visited, and stands on the mountain to the north of Al-Lâhûn, at the place called Barniyûdah, in the mountain-range in the south of the Fayyûm.

Churches of Al-Bahnasâ and the neighbourhood.

§ At Al-Bahnasâ there are several churches, namely, the church of Saint Ammon³; the church of Mark; the church of Saint John⁴; the

² Saint Isaac of Diffr (ΤΦΡΕ), in the province of Al-Gharbîyah, was put to death in the persecution of Diocletian, by order of Arianus, governor of the Thebaid, after horrible tortures. His martyrdom is commemorated on Bashans 6 = May 1. See Synaxarium at that day; Budge, Martyrdom of Isaac of Tiphre, with Coptic text and translation.

church of the glorious martyr Saint George ; and the church of the glorious martyr Mercurius.

§ At Bahûmalis¹ there are several churches, namely, the church of the angel Gabriel, and a second church of the angel Gabriel ; a church of the angel Raphael ; a church of the glorious Saint Sinuthius²; and a church named after Saint Armenius³.

§ The district of Kufâdah⁴. [Here there is] a church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary ; a church of the glorious angel Michael ; a church of the angel Raphael ; a church of the glorious martyr Mercurius ; and the church of the glorious angel Gabriel.

intended here and elsewhere. The most popular martyr of this name, however, would seem to be the John who was martyred together with his cousin Simeon, with whom he is commemorated on Abîb 11=July 5. See their Acts, edited and translated by M. Hyvernat, Actes des MM. de l'Égypte, p. 174 ff. See also Synaxarium at that day ; and Amélineau, Actes des MM. p. 141 ff.

² This may be the famous monk Sinuthius, founder of the White Monastery ; or it may be St. Shanûdah or Sinuthius the martyr, of Al-Bahnasâ, commemorated on Barmahât 14=April 9 ; see Synaxarium at that day.

⁴ A little to the east of Al-Bahnasâ, and nearer the bank of the river.

Fol. 74 a. § Jalfah¹. Here there is a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; a church named after Saint Dioscorus; a church named after the saint and glorious martyr Victor, son of Romanus; and a church named after Bū Talīhah².

§ At Bardanūhah³ there are several churches, namely, the church of Abā Kusṭūl; a church of the angel Michael; a church of the angel Raphael; a church of the angel Gabriel; the church of Mercurius, the valiant martyr; the church of the saint and glorious martyr Saint George; a church named after the valiant and militant martyr Theodore; and the church of the saint Aimīn.

§ Saft Abū Jirjā⁴. Here are several churches, namely, a church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; the church of Thomas; the two churches of the angel Michael and of the angel Gabriel.

§ Al-Kufūr⁵. Here there is a church named after the martyr Theodore.

¹ The Coptic ΠΧΕΛΒΑΞ. It is now included in the district of Bani Mazar, in the province of Minyah, with a population in 1885 of 647. It is probably the Jalaf, which Yâkût says was near Al-Kais, in the district of Al-Bahnasâ. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. ii. p. 1.⁴; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 150 f. Quatremère refers to this passage of our author, Mém. i. p. 257.

² I must admit with Quatremère that I cannot identify this saint, nor even read his name with certainty.

Taḥā.

§ Taḥā al-Madīnah¹, belonging to the province of Al-Ushmūnain. Here there are a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary²; a second church of the Lady; a church of the angel Gabriel; two churches of the two glorious and militant martyrs, Saint George and Mercurius; a church named after Saint Mark the Evangelist; a church named after the glorious martyr Stephen, the chief of the deacons.

Saft al-Muhallabī.

¹ On the west bank, a little to the north of Munyah or Minyah Banī Khaṣīb, in the province of which it is now included, being in the district of Kalūsanā. It is the Coptic ΤΟΥΩΟ. In 1885 it had 1,113 inhabitants. See Al-Idrīsī, trans. Jaubert, i. p. 124; Yākūt, Geogr. Wört. iii. p. 611; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 471 f. Taḥā is again mentioned by our author on fol. 77 a.

² Al-Makrizī mentions two churches alone at Taḥā, viz. those of Mary and the Apostles.

⁵ I conjecturally read Abatīr and identify the saint with Apatīl, a soldier of the martyr Saint George; two churches of the two angels Gabriel and Raphael; and two churches of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, and of the glorious angel Michael.

Rifah and Udrunkah.

§ Rifah¹ and Udrunkah². Here there is a church named after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; a church of the glorious martyr Victor; two churches of the valiant martyr Theodore; a church named after the Saviour; a church named after Saint John; two churches named after the two martyrs Thomas and Severus; and a monastery named after the great saint Sinuthius.

fort of Babylon, whose martyrdom is commemorated on Abîb 16=July 10; see Amélineau, Actes des MM. p. 97. There is a martyr Abadir commemorated on Tût 28=Sept. 25; see Synaxarium at that day.

² Also called Durunkah or Derenkah. It lies a little to the south-west of Usyût, in the district and province of which it is included. It is a little to the north of Rifah, and had 4,629 inhabitants in 1885. In the time of our author and later this was a great Christian centre; and Coptic was still spoken here in the time of Al-Makrizî. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörter. i. p. 111; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 99.

§ Turfah². Here there is a church named after Bartholomew.

As-Sâkiyah, called Sâkiyah Maḥfûz³. Here there are five churches, [respectively named after] the martyr Mercurius, Mark, Stephen, Theodore, and the Disciples.

§ Al-Bahnasā. The meaning of this word is ‘place of marriage’,⁴ and it was built for the maidens who were the virgin daughters of the Fol. 75 a kings, and were married to the sons of the kings from this city. Near it there is a place where Joseph the Truthful worshipped.

There is here a church named after Saint Bartholomew⁵, who was martyred in the oasis of Al-Bahnasā, and whose body is in the church of Karbil there. There is also the church of Theodore.

In this district there are several churches: those of the martyr

¹ This place again I cannot identify.

² This village, formerly in the province of Al-Bahnasā, is now included in the district of Kalūsanā, in the province of Munyah or Minyah, and had 435 inhabitants in 1885. Its Coptic name was Τερβε. See Amélineau, Géogr. p. 492 f.

⁴ I. e. apparently سَلْكِيَّةٌ, which only approximates to the sound of Bahnasā.

The Synaxarium says at Tūt ۱=Aug. 29:

في ناحية القديس التلميذ برتولوماوس أحد الاثني عشر هذا الرسول خرج سمعة ان يمكى
الى الواحات فمكى هو وبطرس اليهم ونشرهم ودعاهم الى معرفة الله بعد ان ظهر لهم من
الآيات الباهرة للعقل والعجبائب ما ادخل عقولهم

‘On this day is commemorated the death of the holy disciple Bartholomew, one of the Twelve. To this apostle it was allotted that he should go to the Oases. So he and Peter travelled thither, and he preached the gospel to the inhabitants of Stephen; Abatîr¹; Bartholomew; the Disciples and Apostles; and our Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary.

The last church is in the city [of Al-Bahnasâ], and is large and spacious.

There are also churches of the glorious angel Michael and of the angel Gabriel; of Isṭafûrâ² the martyr, who was also called Dog's Face, the Oases, and called them to the knowledge of God, after wonderful signs and astounding miracles had been shown to them.'

After converting the people in the Oases,

فانه مضى الى البلاد التي على شاطئ البحر للذين لا يعترفون الله فنادا فيهم وردهم الى
معرفة الله والايمان بالسيد المسيح فسمع به اعزیس الملك فحتى الملك عليه وامر ان يجعلوه في تلیس
شتر ويسلوحا رمل و يطروحوا في البحر

'Then he went to the country on the sea-coast, to those who knew not God; and he preached among them and turned them to the knowledge of God, and to faith in the Lord Christ. But Agharbus, the king, heard of him and was wroth with him, and commanded that they should put him in a sack of hair-cloth and fill it with sand and cast him into the sea.'

الذى كان وجهه وجه كلب

'Whose face was the face of a dog.'

In Zoega, Cat. p. 235, and in Conflicts of Holy Apostles, translated by Mr. Malan from the Ethiopic, p. 76 ff., the name is said to be Christianos. The story is that he was a 'Cynocephalus,' in Coptic οὐρούοοπ, who was converted by Saints Andrew and Bartholomew, and accompanied them in their missions in Nubia. He had lived near the city of Barthos, which has been supposed to mean Parthia. Barthos, however, was not far from Elwah, which Mr. Malan says is unknown, but which might be 'Alwah in Nubia. St. Christopher is commemorated by the Copts on Barmûdah 2=May 28. Cf. Acta SS. at July 25, where a different history of St. Christopher is given. The epithet 'dog-faced' is, however, preserved in a troparion sung by the Greek church, on the festival of St. Christopher (May 9); although the Menologion of Basil (A. D. 984) repudiates the literal acceptance of this epithet, and § Ashrûbah¹. Here there are two churches of the Cross, and one of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, within the city; and there is also one dedicated to her without the city. There is also a church of Michael, the glorious angel; a church of the glorious martyr Mercurius on the borders of the lake; and a church of the glorious Saint George; and two churches of the glorious Saint Theodore; and [churches named after] Saint Paul² and Thomas.

§ At Saft Rashîn³ there is a church named after the glorious martyr Theodore the Eastern, which was wrecked by the Ghuzz and Kurds, who turned it into a mosque. There is here also a church of the angel Gabriel, which fell into decay and was restored by a certain official.

explains it as being metaphorical, and significant of the character of the saint before his conversion. (A. J. B.)

² This would be St. Paul the first hermit; or St. Paul of Tamwahî, a monk famous for his austerities, and commemorated on Bâbah 7=Oct. 4.

f f [II. 7.]

Virgin Mary. This church is hewn out of the mountain-side, and in the rock is the mark of the palm of the hand of the Lord Christ, to whom be glory! which was made when he touched the mountain, when it bowed in adoration before him, after he had gone down thither from Syria. He grasped the mountain, when it worshipped before him, and restored it to its place with his hand ; so that the mark of his palm remains impressed upon that mountain to the present day. In the impression of the hand there is a fine perforation, large enough to admit a collyrium-needle, into which the needle is inserted, and, when it is pulled out, brings up a black collyrium which makes an indelible mark.

Above this church there is a church built of stone, and named after Fol. 76 a the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary. Festival is kept here on the 21st of Tûbah¹, which is the day of her death, when a large congregation assembles. This mountain [of Jabal al-Kaff] is opposite to the district called Al-Bihâ², [but is] on the eastern side of the river. It is also said to be near the city of Al-Ushmûnain³; and it is also called the Jabal at-Tair⁴. On this mountain there are two stone crosses, of a red colour ; one of them is a large stone and the other a small stone.

fol. 76 a, identifies this mountain with the Jabal at-Tair, which rises opposite to Samallût and Bihû, and to the north of Munyah Banî Khasib.

² This village still exists on the west bank, opposite to the Jabal at-Tair, and is included in the district of Kalûsanâ, in the province of Minyah. In 1885 it had a population of 1,252. See Ibn Dukmâk, v. p. 4; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 73.

³ Al-Ushmûnain is in reality about thirty miles to the south of the Jabal at-Tair.

⁴ See Norden's Plate LXXI, where the 'Tshibel ell Deiir,' as he spells it, is to be seen at the northernmost point of the Nile, on the eastern bank. On Plate LXXV Norden gives a view of the monastery on the Jabal at-Tair, which is called Dair al-'Adhrâ, i.e. 'Monastery of the Virgin,' or, more popularly, Dair al-Bakarah, or 'Monastery of the Pulley.' The latter name is common to several monasteries, which use a pulley to hoist up both provisions and visitors; and one so named is shown on Jabal Abû Faidâ in Norden's Plate LXXX, a few miles to the north of Manfalût. The Dair al-'Adhrâ on Jabal

§ In the city of Al-Ushmúnain there is a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, which is very large, and which Al-Hákím changed into a mosque.

On this mountain [of Jabal al-Kaff] there is another church hewn in the rock, and supported by eight columns¹. Opposite to this church there is a hole of a cubit's breadth in which is white sand, some of which is extracted by all those who put their hands in and take some of it, and yet it never diminishes in quantity. The hand of a sinner cannot enter into it, even as far as the tip of the finger.

It is said that when the Franks invaded Upper Egypt with their king², to drive Shirkûh the Kurd and his men away from the land of Egypt, they cut out the piece of rock upon which was the mark of the palm of the hand, and took it back with them to Syria, in the year 563 of the Arabs (A.D. 1168).

§ The monastery of Bisús³, which is near Ishnín⁴. It is said by some at-Tair seems to be the one described by Curzon in his Monasteries of the Levant, ch. ix (p. 111). (A. J. B.)

² Amaury or Almeric, king of Jerusalem from A. D. 1162 to 1173, was induced by bribes to lead his troops to Egypt in the first year of his reign, to assist Shâwar against Shirkûh; and again in 1163, when the Latin sovereign entered Cairo, and Shirkûh retreated. Amaury continued to assist the Fatimide caliph and his vizier, until in 1168 he took a powerful army to Al-Faramâ, which he took and sacked. This unscrupulous piece of treachery against his Egyptian allies forced Shâwar to implore Nûr ad-Dîn, his former enemy, to assist him against the Franks, and Amaury was driven to retreat.

that this monastery belongs to the province of Al-Ushmûnain. Christ visited this place and stayed here.

Fol. 76 b In the monastery there is a church, in the middle of which there is a well of running water. Over this well prayers are said during the rise of the Nile every year ; and then the water in the well rises. In the well there are marks contrived, which show the number of cubits reached by the rise of the Nile ; and when the water of the well rises and stands still at a certain mark, it is known thereby what height the rise of the Nile will reach.

Island of Al-Ushmûnain¹. Al-Ushmûn was the name of one of the sons of Kift, the son of Mizraim. The town was built by Pharaoh, and after it had fallen into ruin it was re-built by Nebuchadnezzar², king of Babylon. It is said that there was on the highest point of this town a cock, and beneath it a row of dromedaries. When a stranger approached the town the cock crowed, and the dromedaries came out to destroy that stranger. But when our Lord Christ, to whom be glory! came to this town, the cock crowed and the dromedaries went out, according to their custom ; and when they saw the Lord Christ and the Lady, and Joseph the carpenter, they worshipped Al-Ushmûnain. There must have been a confusion on the part of some writers between Ishnîn and Al-Ushmûnain. Ishnîn was formerly in the province of Al-Bahnasâ, but is now, under the name of Ashnîn an-Nâgârâ, or 'Ashnîn of the Christians,' included in the district of Bani Mazar, in the province of Minyah. In 1885 it had a population of 1,260. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch i. p. 180; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. 22.

¹ Also called Ashmûnain, Eshmûnain, or Oshmûnain. Al-Ushmûnain is the Coptic መሸዴን. It still exists in the district of Raudah, in the province of Usyût, and had 2,312 inhabitants in 1885. See Amélineau, Géogr. p. 167 ff.; Al-Idrisî [p. 47] (ed. Rome); Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch i. p. 180. The term 'island' is given to the district in which Al-Ushmûnain stands, because it is surrounded by water : by the Nile on the east, the Bahîr Yûsuf or Al-Manhî on the west and south, and a connecting canal on the north.

² On fol. 23 b and 80 a we are told that it was Belshazzar who restored Al-Ushmûnain, after it had been pillaged by Nebuchadnezzar.

them ; and on the spot they were changed into stone ; and their number was five.

On this island there are three hundred villages. Our Lord Christ entered [the town] by the eastern gate. Here the dromedaries worshipped him.

In the history of Anbâ Khâ'il, the forty-sixth patriarch¹, it is said that this is the town which was built by Alexander the Macedonian, who called it Cleopatra², a name which means ‘the Weeping Woman ;’ Fol. 77 a and it was to this place that Marwân, the last of the Omeyyad caliphs, came, and here he was killed on the rock ; as the old monk³ had prophesied, according to the narrative.

* * * one of the districts [of Al-Ushmûnain]. Here is the body of Saint Macarius, the martyr. There is here an ancient temple⁴, near the southern gate. There are several churches contained in it ; namely, a church called after the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, which contains several altars, and marble pillars ; one of which has been celebrated in all times, for upon it is the mark of the hand of the Lord. Outside the church there is a Syrian tree bearing [the fruit called] sebestan⁵, which is of a red colour. The tree stands near the ancient temple ; and when the Lord with the Lady passed by it, it bowed its head in adoration to him. The governor of the town [in later times] wished to cut it down ; but the patriarch Agatho⁶ was standing under the tree, and when the woodcutter struck it with his axe, the axe flew back into his face. Thereupon the governor was afraid, and never again gave orders that the tree should be cut down; but he brought to the patriarch gold out of his treasury, and begged him to accept it, and to spend it on any sort of good work that he might wish.

§ Funkus¹. There was here a church named after one of the martyrs, I know not whom.

§ Tahâ². In this town there were in former times 15,000 Christians, but not a single Hanif or Jew; and there were 360 churches. In the Fol. 77 b caliphate of Marwân al-Jâ'dî, the last of the Omeyyad caliphs, he sent Miwadd to this town, but they drove him out and forbade him to live among them; so he returned to Marwân, and told him of what they had done. Thereupon Marwân sent some of his soldiers, who killed a large number of the people, and scattered them, and destroyed all the churches; so that only one church was left, namely, that named after Saint Mennas, the martyr, for the sparing of which alone it was decreed that 3,000 dinars should be paid. 2,000 dinars, therefore, were collected from the rich men of the city, but 1,000 were wanting, and so one-third of the church was turned into a mosque, which stood before the kaisârtyah.

§ Darwat as-Sarabâm³. Here there is a church of the Lady,

² This place has already been mentioned on fol. 74 a. I do not know whether our author means to imply that all these towns and villages were visited by our Lord.

the Pure Virgin Mary; and a church named after the angel Gabriel, which is called *Magħrath-Thilj*¹.

Near the last-named place is the district of Ḩanabū², where there is a church of the Lady, built of baked bricks.

§ Jabal Ashtar or *Halālīyah*³. Here there is a church named after Bū Nadīl⁴, the martyr, which has fallen into decay.

§ *Munyah Banī Khaṣib*⁵. This city was founded by a Christian named Ibn Khaṣib, after whom it was called. He and a number of members of his family lived here, with those who took refuge with him; and he built houses here, and set up water-wheels. It is said that Munyah Banī Khaṣib acquired the name of the family after whom it was called, because they were numerous, and possessed wealth, and slaves to serve them. The town was formerly called Munyah Bū Kais. Fol. 78 a It lies on the western bank; and it contains several churches, namely, two churches of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; a church of the glorious Saint George, outside the city; a church of the glorious angel Michael, who has also another church; one of these two is outside, and the other within the town; two churches, one of the martyr

² Al-Makrizī gives Sanabū (سنوب) and Yâkût Sanabû (يَكُوت سنوب). The place was a little to the south of Biblā'ū, and close to the Râs al-Manhî. It was famous for the manufacture of excellent horse-cloths. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iii. p. 105; Al-Makrizī names a monastery, but not a church of the Virgin at Ḩanabû.

⁴ This name does not occur in the Synaxarium.

⁵ Often called simply Munyah or Minyah. It is now the capital of the province to which it gives its name, and had in 1885 a population of 15,900. The Coptic form of its name is ሙኒ՚, or, with the article, ቴሙኒ՚. It was also called Munyat Abī'l-Khuṣaib. In our author's time it was a flourishing and populous town; and it is one of the most ancient cities of Egypt. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iv. p. 110, and Mushharik, p. 105; Al-Idrīsī, trans. Jaubert, i. p. 124; Al-Makrizī, Khitat, i. p. 10; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 257 f. Al-Makrizī mentions only six churches as existing in his time at Munyah Banī Khaṣib, viz. the Virgin, Saints Peter and Paul, St. Michael, St. George, St. Paul of Tamwah, and the Three Holy Children.

Mercurius, and the other of Abū Kāis¹—these two; and also in the ancient temple a church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary; a church of the martyr Mercurius; a church of the angel Michael; and a church outside the town on the road to Daljah².

There is a monastery named after the martyr Theodore, outside Nahûr, on the eastern bank.

It is said that Munyah Banî Khaṣib is also called Munyah Bû Kais, after the saint, son of Ḳift, son of Mizraim; and it possesses the body of Bû Halbas³, the martyr.

The church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary, at Al-Muharrakah⁴, in the province of Al-Ushmûnain. It was from this place that Christ returned to Miṣr, and thence to Syria. It is the first church that was founded and consecrated in the southern provinces.

This town is called Kûṣ Kâm⁵ in the desert; and the meaning

³ A martyr of Ahnâs, named هلياس, is commemorated in the Paris Synaxarium, on Barmahât 15=March 11.

⁵ The Coptic ΚΟΚΚΑΛ. Yâkût writes it as one word, قوْقَلَام, 'Kûṣakâm'; see his Geogr. Wörterbuch. iv. p. 111. It is also found in the forms قسقام and قرقام.

Our Lord Jesus Christ stayed here with the Lady, the Pure Virgin Fol. 78 b Mary, his mother in the flesh, and the righteous old man, Joseph the carpenter, at the time when they fled from Herod, the unbelieving king, who slew the infants. They stayed in a chamber in the upper story of this church, which is reached by mounting a flight of steps. In this chamber there is a window which was opened in the wall by the breath of the Lord; it was not opened by the hand, nor by any tool. In the church there is one altar, which was consecrated by the descent upon it of our Lord Christ², with the great disciples, in the clouds, according to the testimony of the homily³ of Philotheus, the

M. Amélineau omits the form given by our author. Some writers have made it the same place as Al-Muḥarrakah, and our author seems to be of this opinion. In fact, however, the monastery of Al-Muḥarrak was built at the foot of the western mountain, which is not far from the town of Kûṣakâm, and is named after it Jabal Kûṣakâm. Vansleb stayed at Kûṣakâm for a month, in A.D. 1664, and says that the town was then in ruins, and that nothing remained but the monastery of Al-Muḥarrak. See Amélineau, Géogr. p. 398. Kûṣakâm is identified with Apollinopolis Parva. (A. J. B.)

² The Paris Synaxarium says, at Hatûr 6=Nov. 2:

اجتماع المخلص الاهنا وملائكتنا ربنا يسوع المسيح مع تلاميذه الاطهار بقسطنطيم وهي المعرق
وارسل قداس فيها كما يشهد به القديس فيلتوتاوس والقديس كيرلس

‘[On this day is commemorated] the meeting of the Saviour, our God and our King, our Lord Jesus Christ, with his pure disciples at Kuskâm, which is the same as Al-Muḥarrak, and the first liturgy which took place there, according to the testimony of St. Philotheus and St. Cyril.’

³ مير is, as Professor Margoliouth points out, the Syriac صادقا. M. Amélineau says, ‘Les moines du monastère de Moharraq m’ont raconté que la Sainte Vierge avait conduit l’enfant Jésus à l’emplacement où s’élève maintenant leur monastère; et il existe dans la littérature copte un discours attribué à Théophile, le patriarche d’Alexandrie, sur la visite de la sainte famille à Moharraq. twenty-third patriarch¹. Hence came the form of consecration [of churches which has since been employed]: the vessels filled with water²; and the prayers recited over the water, to consecrate it; and the odoriferous plants³ and the leaves; and the lamps upon their stands; and the sprinkling of the walls of the church; and [Christ] commanded Peter to cause all churches to be consecrated according to this form: the form of the first consecration, which took place at Al-Muḥarrakah, in the province of Al-Ushmūnain.

The church of the Lady, the Pure Virgin⁴, is the first church which was built in Egypt. Hence Christ went down to Miṣr, and thence he returned to Syria. This church is called Kūs Kām, and is very small.

[Christ and his parents] were accompanied by Moses, son of the brother of Joseph the carpenter. Our Lord Christ bid Moses place a stone beneath his head; this he did, and immediately he died; and he was buried in this place. Opposite the door of the church there is a well of running water. In the church there is a tank full of water, which at a later time was turned into wine. The form of consecration employed for this church became the customary rule for all future times; and the consecration took place on the 6th of Hatūr⁵.

After [his stay here], our Lord Christ blessed the water of the aforesaid well, because he and his mother and their companions had drunk of it; so that every one who went to it in faith, and drank of it or bathed in it, was healed of his pains; and many were cured of their diseases ; and the water became, in the mouth of those that drank of it, sweet like the water of the Jihon ; I mean the Nile of Egypt. Pilgrimages have been made by many multitudes from all districts to this church from ancient times, because it has been celebrated on account of signs and wonders and the healing of various diseases ; and the time of pilgrimage is at Easter, every year. The Lord Christ commanded that the original size of this church should not be added to ; but that it should remain as it was. The mark of the hand of the Lord is on the eastern and on the western mountain.

Adjacent to this church there is a large and ancient keep, which had fallen into decay, but was renewed and restored to its original condition by the Shaikh Abû Zakârî ibn Bû Naşr, the administrator of Al-Ushmûnain ; may God have mercy on him and grant rest to his soul ! this was in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiż.

In this district there lived in ancient times Kharbatâ, son of Mâlik, the hard-hearted giant ; but a thunderbolt was hurled at him from heaven, so that he was burnt up, and not a trace of him could be found ; on this account the place was called Al-Muħarrakah¹.

This Khartabâ, son of Mâlik, the giant, possessed much treasure and wealth ; but he loved to do evil deeds, and did not fear God or dread his chastisements ; and so God hurled a thunderbolt at him, which burnt him up, so that not a trace of him remained. On this account the place was called Al-Muħarrakah, as it has already been said.

To the west of this church there is a vaulted chamber, hewn out in the mountain-side ; and here the Lady used to dwell ; and the Christian people began to come to this chamber, and obtain blessings from it. It is said that at Easter, in the year 891 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1175), the water in the well was turned into wine, according to the testimony of an assembly of priests, bishops, and laity, who wrote down an account of the event.

Monastery at Anṣinā.

§ The great monastery on the mountain, founded by Matthias the monk, near Anṣinā¹. Many monks entered upon the monastic life here. This monk [Matthias²] performed many wonders ; one of which was ¹ Whether this should be Anṣinā, as our MS. has it, or Isnā (Esneh) I cannot say. See following note.

² This Matthias, or Matthew, is mentioned in the Life of the Patriarch Alexander (A.D. 704-737?) ; and the following story is to be found there. See Anc. Fonds Arabe 139, p. 136, l. 10 ff., where the saint, however, is said to have lived near Isnā. A Coptic life of this saint, who is there called ΑΠΑΣΤΟΛΟΣ ΠΩΜΗΚΕ, ‘Saint Matthew the Poor,’ is quoted in Zoega, Cat. p. 534 ff., in which it is said that this saint founded a monastery named after St. Pachomius, near Isnā (Esneh), where he lived a most ascetic life, fighting with devils, who appeared to him in the form of serpents. A girl was brought to him, possessed by a devil, and he bade her parents anoint her with oil from the church lamp, so that she was healed. The Mahometan governor of Isnā used to consult Matthew on matters of importance, and send him presents of grapes, figs, pomegranates, myrtle, and jasmine.

The festival of St. Matthew the Poor is kept on Kīhak 7=Dec. 3 ; and the Synaxarium has the following notice on that day :

وكان يعمل فضائل عظيمة ونخرج الشياطين واستحق نعمة الشفا حتى ان كل مريض ياتوا به
الى عنده يصلى عليه وبشفاعة الرب بصلواته

‘On this day died St. Matthew the Poor. This saint was the superior of a monastery on a mountain in the neighbourhood of Aswān. He used to perform many wonderful works, and cast out devils ; and he was counted worthy to possess the gift of healing, so that he used to pray over every sick man who was brought to him, and the Lord healed the sick man in answer to his prayers.’

The Synaxarium then relates the story of the girl who was swallowed up, in somewhat different terms from those of our author, and concludes thus :

ولبلغ من فضائل هذا الاب انه كان يطعم الوحش بيده فلما اكمل سعيه تنسع بسلام
واخذه الرب اليه صلواته المقبولة تكون مع جميع بنى المعمودية امين

‘Among the wonderful acts recorded of this Father was his habit of feeding the following. A certain maiden had two brothers, who were tempted by Satan to commit sin with her, so that she became pregnant ; and this fact became apparent, but none knew the cause. So her parents brought her to this monk ; and he questioned her as to how the thing had happened ; and she confessed all to him. Then he raised his hands to heaven and prayed ; and the earth immediately opened and swallowed her up, in the sight of her parents. This is attested by the History of the Church in the Life of the Father Alexander, the priest Fol. 80 a of the monastery of *To Henaton*¹, who became forty-third patriarch.

Other Churches and Monasteries in Upper Egypt.

In the district called Mîr there are three churches.

In the district called Sanabû² there are twenty-seven churches.

In the district called Mansara there are three churches.

wild beasts with his own hand. So when he had finished his course, he went to his rest in peace, and the Lord took him to himself. May his acceptable prayers be with all those who are baptized! Amen.'

Renaudot (Hist. Patr. p. 119) calls this saint 'Domitius,' following a corrupt reading (متیوس) in one passage of the patriarchal biography. If he had read a little more carefully, he would have found the name written a few lines lower (متیوس, 'Matthew.'

It was here that Benjamin², the thirty-eighth patriarch, lived in concealment, in the reign of Heraclius, emperor of the Romans, who was a Chalcedonian [heretic], and while George, son of Mennas, the Muḳaukîs, was ruling in Egypt, until the end of ten years, through fear of both of them, according to the warning of the angel. This was the period during

² The patriarchal history compiled by Severus of Al-Ushmûnain states that when the monothelite patriarch Cyrus came to Alexandria, an angel warned the Jacobite patriarch Benjamin (who occupied the see from A.D. 622 to 660?) to flee and lie hid for ten years, since the church would be much troubled during that period, and to bid the other bishops of Egypt also flee and conceal themselves. With regard to Benjamin, the biographer proceeds :

خرج من طريق مريوط وهو مائى على رجليه ليلاً وعه اثنين من تلاميذه حتى وصل الى
المنى ومن هناك مفى الى وادى هبيب وكان الرهبان هناك قليل لانه عقب للحراب الذى كان
في ايام دميانس البطرك وكان البربر لا يدعونهم يكترون هناك ثم انه خرج من الديارات بواحد

'He set out by the road to Maryût, walking on foot, by night, accompanied by two of his disciples, until he arrived at Al-Munâ, whence he travelled to Wâdî Habîb. There the monks were few in number, for it was not long after the ravaging of those monasteries, which took place under the patriarch Damian; and the Berbers did not allow the monks to multiply in the Wâdî Habîb. Then Benjamin quitted the monasteries of Wâdî Habîb, and went to Upper Egypt, and lived in concealment there in a small monastery in the desert, until the completion of the ten years during which Heraclius and the Muḳaukîz (sic) ruled the land of Egypt.' which the emperor oppressed the orthodox people, and required them to conform to his creed, which was contrary to the truth. From these two men the Christians suffered great persecution, yet they would not deny their faith. But in their time the Hanifite nation appeared, and humbled the Romans, and slew many of them; and took possession of the whole of the land of Egypt. Thus the Jacobite Christians were freed from the tyranny [of the Romans]. When the Muslims had ruled for three years, and the patriarch Benjamin was still in concealment, 'Amr ibn al-Āṣi heard of that which had happened to him; so he wrote a decree of protection for the patriarch and all his people; saying in the decree: 'Let the shaikh and patriarch come forth in confidence, with regard both to himself and to all the Copts, who are in the land of Egypt and elsewhere, for they shall be safe from all violence and treachery;' and so on. So this decree of protection reached the father Benjamin the patriarch, who, in consequence, came forth from his concealment, confident in his own immunity and in that of his people, and returned to Alexandria.

The first appearance of the Muslims was [in the time of] Andronicus the Chaste, the scribe who became the thirty-seventh patriarch¹; it was in the twelfth year of Heraclius, emperor of the Romans, which was the year 933 of Alexander².

The plan of construction to be found in this monastery is unlike any that can be seen elsewhere. It is enclosed within a wall. Its gate is plated with iron and studded with nails. It contains a water-wheel, which irrigates a plot of vegetables. The pure body [of the saint] is buried in the monastery.

The biography of Anbâ Christodulus, the sixty-sixth patriarch, relates that the pillars of this monastery all transpired, until the drops ran down like water; and shortly after this the small-pox broke out among the children of Egypt, so that 21,000 of the young people died in less than a month; and wheat was sold at Cairo at eighty dinars the sack, and at Alexandria at seventy-two dinars².

⁴ A famous bishop of Kift in the seventh century. See Amélineau, Un Évêque de Kift au VII^e Siècle. The Synaxarium says at Abîb 13=July 7:

تنعم الاب بستدة استف فنط هذا القديس ترهب من صفرة ومنع عبادات عظيمة جدا

'On this day died the Father Pisentius, bishop of Kift. This saint became a monk in his youth, and was exceedingly devout, and learnt by heart many books, among which were the Psalms and the Twelve Minor Prophets.'

He had a power of performing miracles; and a woman was healed of her sickness by swallowing dust from his footprints. When he celebrated the liturgy he is said to have been conscious of the presence of the Lord and his angels in the sanctuary, and even to have seen them with his bodily eyes. On one occasion a priest, celebrating the liturgy in the presence of St. Pisentius, was guilty of the irreverence of spitting, for which he was severely reproved by the saint, who told him that he had actually defiled the wing of a cherub, who was standing beside the altar; and on hearing this the priest was stricken with remorse, was carried home sick and died.

is a well of water which was visited by our Lady and the Lord Christ with the righteous old man Joseph. At this place there is a church named after the holy man, Saint Coluthus; and a church named after the glorious Saint Mercurius; and the church of Saint John; and a church named after Saint Theodore; and a church of the glorious martyr Saint Mennas; and a church named after the glorious martyr Saint George, outside Al-'Abbásah; and a church named after the glorious martyr Stephen, chief of the deacons; and a church of the fathers and disciples, Peter and Paul; and a church of the great martyrs and champions, Cosmas and Damian, their brethren and their mother; and the church of the glorious angel Michael; and the church of the two great and glorious martyrs Peter and Paul, outside the city, restored by the blessed Shaikh Izz al-Kufât, son of the Shaikh Muştafa 'l-Mulk Abû Yûsuf, under the rule of the Ghuzz and Kurds.

There is a church called Al-'Abbásah outside this city, named after the saint and martyr George, which has already been mentioned. It was visited by Shâwar as-Şâdî, the vizier, while he was governor of Kûş, and he made a vow which he promised to fulfil when he should become vizier; and God allowed him to obtain his desire, for he was made vizier to the caliph, Al-'Âdîd li-dînî 'llâh, at Miṣr, in the month of Muḥarram of the year 558 (A.D. 1162); and he sent that which he had vowed continually up to the time of his death on the 18th of Rabi' the Second, in the year 564 (A.D. 1169); when the Ghuzz and the Kurds, led by Shîrkûh the Kurd, conquered Egypt.

§ The meadow known as that of Banî Humaim, the Arab tribe, lies to the east, in the district called Iknâ. There was on the estate of Marâ, an Arab, a church named after the glorious saint and martyr George, which he founded on the bank of the great river. Marâ built it with his own money; for he loved this saint, who appeared to him in a dream, and said to him: 'Build a church to my name.' But the Muslims were indignant with Marâ on this account, and brought charges against him, because of which he was seized by Al-Mâjîd Fâris, son-in-law of Shâwar, when the latter was wâlî of Kûş, who placed him in fetters, and intended to put him to death. But he offered to the wâlî much money, and the Christians assisted him with a large sum of money ; and so he was released out of the hands of the governor. Afterwards Marâ was killed by Arabs¹ in the desert ; and he was brought to the side of this church and buried there. It is said that before he was killed, Saint George appeared to him during his imprisonment, and spoke with him, and loosened the fetters from his feet. In this church, Marâ replaced the roof of timber by a new roof ; and he had pictures of the martyrs, of the saints, and of the angels painted in the church. Other restorations were undertaken by Fakhr ad-Daulah Abû 'l-Makârim ibn al-Fath, the Alexandrian scribe, when he was in this place in the year 892 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1175-6).

The White Monastery.

§ The monastery of the great saint Sinuthius², near Ikhmîm. In this monastery there is a very large church, spacious enough to contain ¹ The form عُرْتَان, applied especially to the desert Arabs, is, of course, well known in later Arabic.

² See p. 194, note 2. This is the famous White Monastery (الدير الابيض) near Sûhâj, and not far from Ikhmîm, though on the opposite side of the Nile to that town. See Norden's Plate LXXXIX, which shows Dair al-Abiad, or the White Monastery, and Plate XC, which shows Ikhmîm : also Curzon's Monasteries of the Levant, ch. xi (p. 128), and the description and references given in Coptic Churches, vol. i. p. 351 seq. I take this opportunity of remarking that neither the measurements nor the description which I borrowed for the latter work from Denon and from others have proved accurate. Pococke's plan and section face p. 246 of vol. i. The site of the church is now so encumbered with houses which cover the greater part of it—a whole village in fact lies within the walls of the church—that to make an accurate plan will require a great expenditure of time and labour, and probably of money. Ikhmîm, the Χίρμης (Χειρμώ) of Herodotus (lib. ii. 91) and Diodorus (lib. i. 18), was famed for its linen according to Strabo (lib. xvii)—a fame which has been abundantly confirmed in the last few years by the discovery of the rich textiles now in the South Kensington Museum.

The designation 'White Monastery' was already given in the time of our author, for Yâkût speaks of the foundation of St. Sinuthius under that name (Geogr. Wört. ii. p. 1161), mentioning also another 'White Monastery,' which overlooked Edessa.

thousands of people, and within it are the bodies of the two pure

The following is M. Amélineau's account of the monastery of St. Sinuthius as it is at present :

'L'œuvre de ces braves gens [i.e. St. Sinuthius and his monks] reste aujourd'hui. Pas une pierre n'a bougé. Quand de loin on la voit se détacher en avant de la montagne, elle se présente comme un bastion carré : de fait c'est plutôt une forteresse qu'un monastère. La construction est rectangulaire, faite à la manière des anciens Égyptiens, par assises froides. Les blocs de pierre fournis par les temples de la ville ruinée ont dû être coupés et taillés de nouveau : cependant ils montrent encore leur emploi primitif. Les murs d'une grande profondeur n'ont pas moins de 120 mètres de longueur sur cent en largeur. La hauteur en est très-grande ; et tout autour règne une sorte de corniche peinte qui rappelle les chapiteaux de certaines colonnes de la grande salle hypostyle de Karnak. On distingue encore quelques restes des couleurs dont les pierres étaient revêtues. On entrait au monastère par deux portes qui se faisaient face, et dont l'une a été murée depuis. Celle par laquelle on entre aujourd'hui est d'une profondeur de plus de 15 mètres ; quand on y passe l'obscurité fait la frisson. Les moines qui la traversaient étaient vraiment sortis du monde. À droite de cette porte se trouve la "grande église" ; à l'entrée on voit encore deux colonnes de marbre dont on n'a pu trouver l'emploi . . . L'église elle-même a la forme de toutes les églises coptes avec ses cinq coupole. La coupole du fond est ornée de peintures encore bien conservées, avec des inscriptions coptes en l'honneur du fondateur : elles sont sans doute postérieures à Schnoudi. L'obscurité de cette église empêche de reconnaître les peintures et de lire les inscriptions ; il faut se trouver au monastère avant 2 heures du soir . . . Le long des murs se trouvaient des cellules, et les grandes salles de réunion ; tout a disparu aujourd'hui, car les huttes actuelles sont récentes. Au-dessus de l'église dans l'épaisseur des murs, on avait pratiqué une rampe qui conduisait à la terrasse ; à gauche de cette rampe en terre on avait construit des chambres . . . Les constructions du côté gauche de l'église sont seules demeurées debout : celles du côté droit n'offrent plus que des ruines où l'on ne peut se risquer.' (Vie de Schnoudi, p. 88.)

It should be added that the first monastery on the site of the present 'White Monastery' was founded by Abâ Bajûl, the teacher of St. Sinuthius, who built the much larger one which still exists. (Op. cit. p. 47.) (A. J. B.)

disciples, Bartholomew¹ and Simon the Canaanite, two of the twelve Apostles. The body of the great saint Sinuthius, the archimandrite²—a word which means ‘superior of the superiors’—is in a monastery at the top of the mountain called Atribah³; it was contained in a chest until the invasion of Egypt by Shirkūh and the Ghuzz who accompanied him, and who broke open the chest; and the body was taken out of it, and concealed in the ground in an unconsecrated chamber near the altar. In this monastery there is a keep; and there is around the keep and the monastery also a wall of enclosure, within which there is a garden full of all sorts of trees.

That part of the history of the church, which describes the patriarchate of Anbā Khā'il, the forty-sixth patriarch, relates⁴ that Al-Kāsim ibn 'Ubaid Allāh, wālī of Egypt, was an unenlightened and wicked man. He employed large boats⁵ to carry his odalisques [up and down the river] to all parts of the country as far as Uswān, together with his body-guard and troops. In one of his journeys he came to this monastery, accompanied by one of his odalisques, whom he greatly loved; and both of them were riding upon horses. Now there was in this monastery an aged monk who was the superior of the monks.

² So the Coptic and Arabic panegyrics on this saint call him:

ΑΠΑ. ΣΕΝΟΥΤ ΠΙΠΡΕΣΜΗΤΕΡΟС ΟΤΟΩ ΠΙΑΡΧΙΕΛΛΑΡΙΤΗС
ابا شوادة الارشمندریدس بجبل ادربية

³ There was a mountain and also a village of this name, called in Coptic ΑΤΡΗΠΕ or ΑΤΡΕΠΕ, and in Arabic ادربيه, ادربية, and below on fol. 87 a even اندربيا. On the mountain the ‘White Monastery’ was situated, so that it was called ‘The Sinai of St. Sinuthius’ (Amélineau, Mém. pour servir, p. 392; cf. Géogr. p. 70 f.).

⁴ This story is related in the biography of the patriarch Michael or Khā'il; — see Anc. Fonds Arabe 139, p. 142, line 20 ff.

⁵ The expression used in the patriarchal history is مراكب مثل قصور الملوك, ‘boats like royal palaces.’

So the monks went forth to meet Al-Kâsim and brought him into the monastery, together with the odalisque who was with him ; and they passed through the first door, and through the second which leads into the enclosure of the church ; and they went as far as the door which forms the entrance into the church, still riding upon their horses. But as they were about to enter into the church, this old man, the superior of the monastery, cried out, saying : 'Alight [from thy horse], O emir, and enter not with such pride into the house of God, above all in the company of this woman ; for never from the beginning has any woman entered into this church ! I fear for this woman therefore, if she shall enter into this church !' But the emir paid no heed to the words [of the old man], but entered on horseback, together with his odalisque and the soldiers who were with him. So when he came to the middle of the church, his horse plunged with him, and he fell to the ground ; and through his fall the horse which

Fol. 83 b the woman was riding also plunged, so that she fell to the ground and died on the spot ; and the horse that was under her died also. And as for Al-Kâsim, the aforesaid governor, there descended upon him the spirit of an unclean devil, which buffeted him, so that he foamed at the mouth, and his teeth gnashed like the tusks of a wild boar. But when he had recovered a little, he understood the evil that he had done, and repented of his rashness, and that he had not listened to the bidding of the aged superior. Then he called the superior and said to him : 'To-day I have sinned, because I did not listen to the counsel which thou didst address to me. But now the mysteries of this place have been manifested to me so that I do not doubt them. I desire therefore, O shaikh, that thou shouldest accept this gift of money, and pray for me that God may forgive me, and may not deal with me as I deserve, because I ventured into the house of God, and entered it riding on horseback together with my companions.' Then the aged monk consoled him, and would not accept anything from him ; but the emir adjured him and forced him, and showed humility towards him, and at last induced him to take four hundred dinars, saying : 'I ask God to pardon thee, O shaikh, that thou mayest ask him to pardon me this sin which broke from me.'

Now there was in the church a wooden chest of sâsam-wood inlaid with ivory¹, and containing three shelves, which Saint Sinuthius had made to contain books, and he used to inscribe there the amount of votive offerings accruing to the monasteries. And a certain shaikh accompanying the emir, named Ar-Rayân, who had been wâli of Egypt before Al-Kâsim, and was his friend, begged that he might take this chest away with him. But he was informed that the chest was the property of the church, and that it was impossible that it should be removed; but he would not listen to that, although the great miracle that had happened was told him. And he commanded a body of men to carry it out of the church; but they were not able to do so. So when he saw this other wonder, he asked pardon of God most high, and made a gift of three hundred dinars of his money. Then they departed. And they were filled with doubts and dismay; and the unclean spirit did not cease to possess Al-Kâsim, chastising him at all times until the hour of his death.

§ Bahrâm², the Armenian Christian, who had been vizier in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiż, became a monk in this monastery after he was banished from his office. Then he desired to go to Cairo, although he was exceedingly ill and weak; so he was carried to Cairo and arrived there still living.

§ Nestorius the heretic, who had been patriarch of Constantinople, was buried in the city of Ikhmîm, after he had been in banishment there for seven years, in the year 543³. Now when rain falls, it does not descend upon his tomb, because he was the cause of the Council of Chalcedon.

Story of Febronia.

§ At Al-Jimûdât¹, in the province of Upper Egypt, there is a convent, to the east of that district, in which there were nuns, of virginal life, to the number of thirty. Marwân al-Jâ'dî, the last of the Omeyyad Fol. 84 b caliphs, summoned the Bashrûd or Bashmurites² to assist him in his war, when he fled from the Abbaside; and he allowed them to plunder and take prisoners and slay [as they would]; so they set about doing so. Among the places which they attacked was this convent, which they afterwards plundered; and among the nuns there was a young maiden³, named Febronia, who had come from Syria to this convent, when she was three years old, and had grown up within its walls; and she was of great beauty. So when the Bashmurites saw her, they were astonished at her, on account of her beauty; and they said one to the other: 'Never was such beauty seen in the world!' So they took her and brought her out from the convent, and separated her from her sisters the virgins, and consulted with one another as to what they should do with her; and some of them said: 'Let us cast lots for her;' but others said: 'Let us take her to the prince.' But while they were consulting upon these and similar proposals, she said to them: 'Where is your chief, that I may tell him of a great secret, worth a great sum of money? And then you will let me return to my sisters in the convent in which I was brought up; for I am a virgin, and have lived in retirement in the convent, apart from men, and serving God, to whom be praise!' Then the leader of the band answered her and said: 'Here I am! What is it that thou wilt tell me, and what is the secret which thou saidst was worth much money?' So she said to him: 'My ancestors were wise, valiant, and warlike; Fol. 85 a and they possessed a secret which they inherited from their ancestors, and disclosed to no one else. They engaged in great wars, and they returned in safety, without a wound to any one of them; and the cause of this was that they knew certain names which they repeated over the oil with which they anointed themselves; then they went out to the wars, and neither the sword nor the arrow nor the spear did any harm to them. Now this is what you stand in need of. If therefore thou wilt let me go back to my convent, I will confer this benefit upon thee, and show thee this great secret, and I will give thee what I have of this oil; and if thou dost not believe my word, then anoint with it whomsoever thou pleasest, and behold the truth of my words.' Then he said to her: 'Anoint thyself with this oil; for no one else will be easily persuaded to do so; nor will I make the experiment upon any of my comrades.' So she said to him: 'Wilt thou swear to me, before I reveal this secret to thee, that thou wilt let me go, and restore me to my convent and the place in which I was brought up?' Then he swore to her, saying: 'I will let thee go, and will not allow any of my comrades to take thee captive.' Then she said to him: 'Let me go back to my place with thee and no other, that I may take the oil and anoint myself with it in thy presence.' So he went with her into the convent; and she approached the picture of the Lady, and prayed before it, and begged the Virgin to assist her to obtain deliverance; and then she anointed herself on the neck with oil of the lamp. Fol. 85 b Then he said: 'I will not make the experiment except in the presence of my comrades.' So he returned to them with her, and told them all that had happened, and said to them: 'Know that I have sworn to this maiden, that if her words prove true I will let her go, and will allow none of my comrades to have power over her. Do you then agree with me in this matter?' Then they said to him : 'We will not oppose thee; and if this secret be true we shall obtain much advantage from it.' Then he said : 'This maiden said, "Try it on whomsoever thou mayest wish," so I said to her, "It is fittest to try it on thee;" and she consented; and she anointed her neck with it; but I did not think fit to try it except in your presence.' Then he commanded one of his comrades, who had a sharp-edged sword with him, and said to him, 'Come, strike her upon the neck with this sword that thou hast with thee; and if we see the result to be successful, you will agree with me to let her go.' So they consented to his bidding. Then that man arose and drew his sword, and the maiden bent her knees and displayed her neck; but they did not know that which was in her heart. Then she covered her face, and said : 'If there is any strong man among you, let him strike with his sword upon my neck, and you will see the power of God in this great secret.' So that man whom their chief had appointed went forward to her, and struck with all his might; and her head immediately fell from her body; for it was her purpose by Fol. 86 a this means to preserve her maidenhood, that she might appear before Christ a pure virgin, as she had been created, without earthly stain. So when the ignorant Bashmurites saw what had befallen the maiden, they knew at last what had been her intention; and they repented and were exceedingly sad, and did no injury henceforth to any of those virgins, but let them go, and refrained from the undertakings which they had planned, and restored to the nuns all that they had pillaged from their convent.

Ikhmîm and the neighbourhood.

§ In the city of Ikhmîm there were seventy churches until the end of the year 552 of the Arabs (A. D. 1157).

In the district of Dimnû¹ there is a church, on the western bank of the river, named after the glorious saint Abû Baghâm.

There is also the monastery of Saint Pachomius¹ at Barjanûs, in the district of Tahâ.

There is the monastery of Abû Halbânah², to the east of Ikhmîm, near which there is a spring of water which runs from the mountain into a reservoir there.

The monastery of Saint Paul, the superior of the monastery in Upper Egypt.

The monastery of Saint Pachomius, the superior of the monastery of Ikhmîm.

§ The Book of the Monasteries by Ash-Shâbushtî relates that there is in the district of Ikhmîm a large monastery to which visitors come from all parts; and it is near the mountain called *Jabal al-Kahf*³. At a certain place on this mountain there is a fissure; and on the day when that monastery keeps its festival, all the birds of the species Fol. 86 b called *Abû Kîr*⁴ come to this place; and it is a great wonder to see the multitude of the birds, and to hear their cries, and to behold their assembling around that fissure. Then, one after the other, without ceasing, they insert their heads into the fissure, and place their beaks in the cavity of the mountain, and utter a cry and come away; and this they do until the head of one of them is caught in the fissure, and he hangs there, beating with his wings until he dies; and after that all the birds fly away until not one of them is left there.

² It is apparently this convent which Pococke describes (vol. i. p. 78) as lying 'to the east of Akhmîm' and 'being one of the most dismal retirements he ever saw.' Pococke mentions the spring and the well called 'Bir Elaham.' In Pococke's name for this monastery 'Dermadoud' (Dair Madûd?) there is no correspondence with that given by Abû Sâlih, which is, of course, a name of dedication, not of locality. (A. J. B.)

That monastery is celebrated for its wonderful miracles.

Anşinâ and the neighbourhood.

§ At Anşinâ¹ was the house of Mary the Copt², who was born and grew up at this place. She it was whom the Mūkauķis sent as a gift to Mahomet, who married her; and the purpose of the Mūkauķis in sending Mary the Copt, was that through her he might be connected by affinity³ with Mahomet. The house of Mary was afterwards turned into a mosque.

The district known as Anşinâ. This was the name of one of the sons of Kift, son of Mizraim, who built it for certain sorcerers. [There is here] the monastery of a saint called Abû Tabîh⁴, whose body is contained within it.

There is a monastery named after the saint Coluthus, who was a priest, and suffered martyrdom by burning while he was still alive; he was of a beautiful countenance; and he obtained the crown of martyrdom; and his body is contained within the monastery.

Fol. 87 a At Anşinâ there is also a church named after the saint and great martyr George; and a church of the valiant martyr Theodore the Eastern; and a monastery of the great saint Sinuthius, on Mount Andaribâ⁵, in which many holy monks have lived, especially the holy champion and ascetic, the blessed Anbâ Yasîb.

² Mary the Copt, the concubine of the prophet Mahomet, was a native of Hafn, in the neighbourhood of Anşinâ. See Ibn Hishâm, Sîrah Mūhammad (ed. Wüstenfeld), i. pp. 6 and 111; cf. Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch ii. p. 116.

³ Rather, that the Egyptians might be connected with Mahomet by affinity.

⁴ So Quatremère, who makes use of this passage of Abû Şâlih; see Mém. i. p. 41.

⁵ I take this to be another form of Atrîbah or Adribah (see above, fol. 82 b),

At Anṣinā there is also the monastery of Al-Khādim, and the church named after Manasseh, which was built over the tomb of that Yasīb on account of the number of miracles and the healing of diseases which were manifested at it.

At Anṣinā also there is a church called the 'Church of the Water,' in which festival is kept in memory of the great martyrs and champions of the name of Christ, whose number is forty-one¹.

There is also a church named after Saint Theodore Basrādīlādus outside Anṣinā.

The monastery of Matthew on the mountain, which was restored by the blessed priest, the fisherman² of Anṣinā. This blessed priest used to make fishing-nets, while he was keeping the monastic rule; and many became monks in this monastery for his sake. Matthew was a native of Askīt³, and he used to pray over the oil, and whatever sick person was anointed with it was healed of his disease through the power of God which dwelt in him; and he used to cast out devils in the name of Christ, from those who were possessed by unclean spirits.

⁵ Suyūt, Asyūt, or Usyūt is the largest town in Upper Egypt, and has been a place of great importance from remote antiquity. built by Manfā'ūs, the king ; and its name means the 'Beloved.' The *Raqq*¹ is here equivalent to 1,000 dirhams. From this town there is a road to the Oases. There were formerly in the town cooks belonging to the king. There is no finer bed of river-slime on the face of the earth than that found here, nor any that has a sweeter smell ; it is enclosed by mountains and is deposited by the water of the Nile ; its extent is 30,000 feddāns, all in one plain ; and if a little of it were rubbed in the fingers it would spread out evenly, and some of it would extend beyond the sides ; in it they sow flax and wheat and clover and other crops. It is said that there is nowhere in Egypt anything like this level unbroken expanse of cultivated fields², or any more delightful place where the beauties of the country can be better enjoyed than this, when its crops are in full luxuriance, and when the flowers appear ; they say there is nothing more admirable to be seen. The whole of it on the west is enclosed by a mountain, white in colour, and of the form of a *tailasdn*³, which looks as if it were a cascade of silver ; and not a word spoken can be heard there on account of the great noise of the birds.

At Usyūt no Jews live ; nor does a single Jew travel that way, unless he is taking a journey and passes it on the road.

The city is surrounded by a brick wall and has seven gates, namely, Bâb al-Jabal on the north ; Bâb Wardîs ; on the east Bâb al-Arman ;

The monastery called the monastery of Abū Sādir¹, whose body arrived at Shūtb on the 5th of Hatūr. Near the monastery is the mountain of At-Talīmūn², the length of which is twelve posts on the eastern side.

At Al-Kharibah at Usyūt there is a ruined bath³.

There is a church of the martyr Abū Baghām, whose body lies within it ; and he has another church at Al-Kharibah.

There is a monastery at Samallūt⁴, in the district of Al-Ushmūnain,

² Al-Idrīsī names this mountain under the form Tālāmān (طَلَامَن) ; see the Roman edition [p. 48]. Cf. Al-Makrīzī, Khitāt, i. p. 11.

³ The mention of the ruined Roman bath at Usyūt recalls the incident of the suffocation of a number of men in a bath, during the reign of Theodosius I, by the members of the rival faction, at the time of the games in the circus, and the threatened punishment of the city by the emperor, whose wrath was averted through the intercession of the saintly monk, known as 'John of Lycopolis' or Usyūt. The reputation of John of Lycopolis was so great that Theodosius consulted him, as if he were an oracle, before his war with Eugenius. See Gibbon, ch. xxvii, who quotes D'Anville, Description de l'Égypte, p. 181, and Abū 'l-Fidā (ed. Michaelis), pp. 14, 25, 92, for an account of the town of Usyūt, and, for the life of John the monk, Rufinus and Palladius, in Rosweyde's Vitae Patrum ; also Sozomen, lib. vii. 22, and Claudian, in Eutropium, lib. i. line 312 f., for the embassy of Theodosius. and here there is a church named after the martyr Abū Baghām¹, enclosed within a surrounding wall, within which there is also a mill, and an oven, and an oil-press². Adjacent to the church is a keep, which is large and high, towering above the walls ; and there is a garden containing palms and other trees. This monastery owned property, the gift of the caliphs, consisting of twenty feddāns of black soil. The monastery was seized by one of the Ghuzz or Kurds in the year 569 (A. D. 1174), and he turned it into a mosque, and seized the garden and the oven, and made the keep his dwelling-place ; but in the same year he died, without carrying out his purposes.

Monastery of Al-'Asal.

Fol. 88 b Monastery of Al-'Asal³. This is near Munyah Banī Khaṣib. It contains the church of Saint George, and is enclosed by a surrounding wall. It has two keeps and a garden ; one of the former being to the south of the church and containing a mill and the cells of the monks ; and the other being to the north of the church. It also has a press for olive-oil. It is said that there are here fourteen churches. There is a church of the saint Sinuthius ; a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary ; a church of the glorious angel Michael ; a church named after Saint Claudius the martyr ; a church named after the saint Bū Hadr⁴ of Al-Ushmūnain ; and a church named after the saint and martyr George, in which the liturgy is celebrated every day of the year.

It is said that there was in the monastery of Al-'Asal a monk named Simon the saint, who became bishop. At his cell there were fruit-bearing palms, in which the ravens used to build their nests; and, through his gentleness and kindness, the shy raven grew so tame that it ate from his hand. And the sinners among his people left off their sins, and listened to his life-giving doctrines, and repented of their sins, and began again to attend the church in order to hear his exhortations and teachings, and to bring him, out of their earnings, tithes and money in payment of vows.

District of Al-Khuşûş¹, in the province of Suyût, on the eastern bank. Here the Copts have twenty-five churches, and the Armenians have a monastery within the town, and two churches outside the town, and two churches within the town. The restorers of these churches will now be mentioned. There is a church of Abû Fânah², restored by Ar-Rashid Abû 'l-Faḍl; the church of Abû Hakandâ, named after a relation of Ṣafî ad-Daulah, and restored by Hakandâ Abû Zakârî Minâ ibn Kafri, known as Ibn Bûlus, together with An-Najîb, his brother; the church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary; the church of the glorious saint George; the church of the glorious saint and martyr Mercurius; and the church of Bandalûs. The convent of Hanâdah, which is inhabited by nuns, is at Rifah, in the province of Suyût.

Amélineau omits a reference he might have made to Abû Ṣâliḥ. See his Géogr. p. 222 f. Yâkût says that the inhabitants of Al-Khuşûş were all Christians (Geogr. Wörterbuch ii. p. 224).

At Suyût, on the western bank, there are sixty churches; and on the mountain there are churches hewn in the rock¹ with the pickaxe, and all of them have a keep.

There is a monastery named after the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary, which is known as Karfûnah².

There is a monastery named after Saint Severus³, outside the town. It is hewn out of the top of the mountain and stands out from the mountain. It possesses a keep, and a cistern which contains a thousand pitchers of water, and is filled from the blessed Nile. On the upper part of this mountain there is a place where there are [chambers in] three stories, hewn in the rock. And there are in this monastery rope-ladders, and there is a place whither, if there be great cause for fear, the monks ascend by these ladders, and when they have arrived at Fol. 89 b the top they draw up the ladders after them. The monastery contains a mill and several ovens, and a press for olive oil. There are thirty monks here. Beneath the monastery there is a garden, full of trees and tall fruit-bearing palms and olives and pomegranates, and verdant plots, and beds of vegetables; and from these the monastery gains much money, which pays for its needs year by year, besides that which God sends them through alms and also through payment of vows. This monastery is independent, and its inmates are leaders among the monks, holy men, ascetics, champions of the faith, and learned. The monastery was free of taxation; but when the Ghuzz and Kurds conquered Egypt they seized upon this and the other gardens in the possession of the monasteries, and also seized their endowments.

In the monastery of Saint Severus there lived an aged monk, an ascetic, who fasted continually week after week; at the end of the week he communicated on the Saturday, and then he fasted and communicated again on the Sunday, after which he broke his fast. This was the manner in which this old man served God and fought against sin, until he died; may the Lord have mercy upon us through his intercessions! News of this old man, before he died, had reached Ṭalā'i' ibn Ruzzik¹, through the wâli of Upper Egypt; so Ṭalā'i' visited the old man, and witnessed his mode of life, and made enquiries of him, and found that the report was true; and the old man announced to Ṭalā'i' that he would rise in rank and would become vizier; and indeed the most high God did grant him the vizierate; and so he presented to the monastery, in addition to that which it already possessed, a tract of fertile soil.

Now this holy old man used to fast even during the Fifty Days ^{Fol. 90 a} [between Easter and Pentecost], every day until the ninth hour; and then he broke his fast with a few lupins only.

This monastery contains a keep, which is a lofty structure.

² The churches and monasteries of Rîfah, a little to the south of Usyût, are mentioned by Al-Makrîzî. The Coptic name of the place is ερήμη. It still exists, and had in 1885 a population of 4,119. See Amélineau, Géogr. p. 165.

There is a church named after the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary.

There are two churches named after the angel Gabriel, one of which was wrecked by the mob of Muslims in the year 580 (A.D. 1184), under the rule of the Ghuzz and Kurds. There are also two churches named after the angel Michael; two churches named after the martyr Abâ Lûkûm; a church named after the Fathers and Disciples; a church of the martyr Saint Mennas; two churches of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary; a monastery named after the glorious martyr Theodore; a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary; a church named after the angel Gabriel; a church named after the martyr Abâ Falûkh; the church of the angel Raphael; and a church named after the great martyr George.

Our author is probably in error in supposing that there was a place of this name near Kalûsanâ, although Al-Idrîsî mentions a village called Al-Marâghah, five miles from Anşinâ. The Al-Marâghât of the revenue-list was in the district of Ikhmîm, and so might be that now existing. See Al-Idrîsî (trans. Jaubert), i. p. १२४; De Sacy, Abd-Allatif, p. ७०१; Rec. de l'Égypte, ii. p. २१०. Fol. 93 a Story of the cistern which is named the Pure. It is said that a man saw a cistern which was cut out of a great stone, into which water was flowing from a spring at the foot of the mountain in this district, near a church. The water flows in a continuous stream and is sweet in taste and in smell; but if a man or woman in a state of uncleanness touches it, it ceases to flow at that moment, as soon as it reaches the cistern; and the people of the place know this, and so they draw out the water which is already there and wash the cistern with other water; and then the water begins to flow again from the spring according to its custom.

Another Arabic name is داح البهنسا given because it lies to the north of the Oases of Al-Khârijah and Ad-Dâkhilah. The Oasis of Al-Bahnasâ, to which there is a road from the town after which it is named, is reckoned a part of the province of the Fayyûm, and consists of four districts: that of Al-Buwîfî with 1,675 inhabitants; that of Al-Ķasr, the chief town, with 1,387 inhabitants; that of Mudishah with 1,506 inhabitants; and that but without the head¹. On the festival of his martyrdom, the body is brought out from the shrine, and a new veil is put over it; and it is carried in procession all round the town, with candles and crosses and chanting; and then it is carried back to the church. Formerly the people feared lest the Romans might steal it, and take it to their church; and so it was removed to the mountain with great precautions, and placed in a cave, which was blocked up with stones and concealed. But a certain man who had a devotion to Saint George, saw him in a vision, and he said: 'Why have you imprisoned² my body? Bring me out from this place.' Then the bishop and the people did not cease to search until they found the body, and they brought it out and restored it to the church. Ibn al-Khasîr, the wâlî of the Oases, came here in the caliphate of Al-Hâfiẓ; and he sent Fol. 98 b some men who carried off the body of Saint George and brought it to the wâlî's house; and he said: 'I will not restore it to the Christians, until they pay me a large sum of money.' So the bishop and the chief men among the Christians brought him money from time to time, but it did not satisfy him, and he would not restore the body to them. Then God sent a cloud and a violent wind and rain and lightning and heavy thunder, during many successive days, such as had never been witnessed in that country; and it was said to the wâlî: 'Perhaps this misfortune has happened solely because thou hast detained this body.' Then the wâlî sent for the bishop, and gave the body up to him; and immediately the calamity ceased altogether. It is said that this bishop held his see for thirty-eight years, and yet he only placed the shroud upon this body twice during the whole of that time, on account of that which he had witnessed with regard to it; and he said to the priests: 'Take charge of this; for I cannot explain or speak of what I have seen.'

It is said that the limbs of this body were not separated from it, but that it was found entire, and without any change. It is commonly reported among men that the body of this martyr is at the town of Lydda¹ in Syria. Some say, however, that the head is there, but that

Fol. 94 a the body was brought to this country [of Egypt], because the governor of Egypt and the governor of Syria were two brothers, and, as Syria was filled with troops and marauders, the governor of that country feared that some outrage might be committed on the body; and so the trunk, without the head, was brought to the Oases, because they are free from the incursions of troops and depredators; and the proof of this is that the pilgrims who went to Syria to visit Lydda, that they might receive a blessing from the body of the martyr Saint George, said that they saw the head without the body; and this was during the Fast of the year 890 of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1174).

Nubia.

At Bujarâs, the capital of the province of Al-Marîs², which is a well-populated city, there is the dwelling-place of Jausâr, who wore the turban and the two horns and the golden bracelet. A certain traveller came to [the caliph] Al-'Aziz bi'llâh and informed him that he had visited a certain city, and had seen a great wonder, passing man's understanding ; namely, that on the seventh day of Barmûdah a city appears, with a wall, and a water-wheel going round near the city gate, and sycamore-trees, and cattle drinking from the cistern fed by the water-wheel ; and that this lasts for two hours in the day, and the horses go and drink from that cistern ; then after that the city disappears, and nothing is seen where it stood ; and no one can reach it, although it seems close to him while it is far off ; and that city is called among Fol. 94 b the people of that district the city of Alfi ; and it is not seen again until the same day in the next year¹.

² This passage with the following account of Nubia is to be found translated in substance in Quatremère, Mém. ii. p. 31 ff. Marîs (Μαρίς, 'the South') was the most northern province of Nubia, bordering upon Egypt. The south wind was likewise called Marîs. Yâkût names Marîsa 'an island in Nubia from which slaves are exported.' See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörterbuch, iv. p. 510; Al-Makrizî, Khitâb, i. p. 111; 'Abd al-Latîf, p. 12. Al-Mas'ûdî gives, as the chief divisions of Nubia; Dunkulah (Dongola), Mukurrah, 'Alwah, and Marîs; see Murâj adh-Dhahab (ed. Barbier), iii. p. 32. It is well known that the northern extremity of Nubia between Syene (Aswân) and Pselcis (Dakkah), and later up to Hiera-Sycominos (Muhammara), was a dependency of Egypt under the Ptolemies and the Roman Empire, and was called Dodecaschoenus.

§ The first place in the province of Muķurrah² is the monastery called that of Safanūf, king of Nubia, which is in the country below the second cataract³.

'The king of Muķurrah and Nubia.' At the end of the seventh century of our era, the Coptic patriarch Isaac is said to have received letters from the king of Muķurrah (ΠΟΥΡΡΟ ΗΓΕΑΝΚΟΤΡΙΔ), who requested that a bishop might be sent to him. See the Coptic life of this patriarch, edited by M. Amélineau. Vansleb states that there were seven episcopal sees in the province of Muķurrah, viz. 'Korti, Ibrim, Bucaras, Dongola, Sar, Termus, Suenkur,' and refers for them to a letter published by the Père Bonjour, entitled In Monumenta Aegyptiaca Bibliothecae Vaticanae brevis exercitatio. M. Amélineau says that Makorrah extended from the modern Korosko to the ancient Napata (above Korti).

The patriarchal biography in the compilation of Severus of Al-Ushmûnain does not mention any letter from the king of Muķurrah, but states that the patriarch Isaac himself wrote to the kings of Nubia and Abyssinia ملك لليش وملك النوبة, bidding them live at peace together, and abstain from conflict with one another ; and that the wâlî of Egypt, 'Abd al-Azîz, suspecting the object of the letters, caused them to be intercepted (Brit. Mus. MS. Or. 26, 100, p. 126, l. 25—p. 127, l. 5).

The monastery of Michael and Cosmas is large and spacious, and possesses a sycamore-tree, by which the rise and fall of the Nile are ascertained every year.

There is a monastery called that of Dairâ, near which there is an ancient temple, between two great mountains.

A city called the city of Bausâkâ. This is a large and handsome city, full of people and of all commodities, and possessing many churches. Here dwelt the Lord of the Mountain, whose eyes were put out by George, son of Zacharias Israel. Here is the monastery of Saint Sinuthius, in which Abû Rakwah al-Walîd ibn Hishâm¹ was taken prisoner in the month of Rabi' the First, in the year 397 of the Arabs (A.D. 1006). Near the town there is a gold-mine.

Mountain of Zidân. Here is the monastery of Abû Jarâs, in a town on the west, which possesses a bishop. It is a beautiful town on the mountain. At night a light as of fire is seen in this town from a distance, but if the beholder comes near to it he cannot find it; yet it is continually seen as if there were many lamps in the town. In the same way, at Bagdad, in the district of 'Ukbarâ², many lamps are seen on a certain night of the year, but they are not real.

At this place is found emery¹, with which precious stones are polished. The people dive for it; and the touch of it is found to be different from that of other stones, and so those who search for it recognize it; but if they are in doubt, they breathe upon it and then it is covered with drops, and they know that it is emery. Emery is found nowhere in the whole world except in Ceylon² and at this place.

There is near this town a hill on which there is a spring of warm water like that at Tiberias. Here also is the mountain of thirst, where no one can reach the water that is there, on account of the distance and the height; and even if a man ascends to the top of this mountain he cannot reach the water, but can only look at it, although it seems to be near to him; and when he tries to arrive at it he cannot do so.

² The name of Ceylon (Sarandib) was familiar to the Arabic-speaking world at the time of our author, through the reports of Arab travellers and the commerce of Arab traders. Precious stones and spices were exported from Ceylon to Al-Irāk, Syria, and Egypt. See Al-Idrīsī (ed. Rome) [p. 42]; Yākūt, *Geogr. hundred churches in the province of 'Alwah seems surprising, but it is clear that at this period Nubia was almost exclusively Christian.

Nearly four centuries later Francisco Alvarez, in his story of the Portuguese mission to Abyssinia, expressly records the existence of ancient Christian churches in this same part of Nubia. His words are worth quoting (Lord Stanley's Tr. p. 352):—'I heard from a man, a Syrian, a native of Tripoli in Syria, and his name is John of Syria . . . , that he had been to this country, and that there are in it a hundred and fifty churches, which still contain crucifixes and effigies of our Lady and other effigies painted on the walls, and all old. These churches are all in old ancient castles which are throughout the country; and as many castles, there are so many churches. While we were in the country of the Prester John, there came six men from that country to the Prester himself, begging of him to send them priests and friars to teach them. He did not choose to send them: and it was said that he said to them that he had his Abima [sic: but read Abâna, i. e. Metropolitan] from the country of the Moors, that is to say from the patriarch of Alexandria, who is under the rule of the Moors: how then could he give priests and friars, since another gave them? They say that in ancient times these people had everything from Rome, and that it is a very long time ago that a bishop died whom they got from Rome, and on account of the wars of the Moors [Saracens in Egypt] they could not get another, and so they lost all their Christianity. These Nubiis border upon Egypt, and they say they have much fine gold in their country. This country lies in front of Suaquem [Suâkin], which is close to the Red Sea.'

trace out furrows in the field and bring the seed and lay it at the side of the field, and beside it they place a supply of the drink called *mizr*¹, and go away ; and afterwards they find that the seed has been sown in the ground, and the mizr has been drunk. So again at the time of harvest they reap some of the corn, and leave beside the rest of it a supply of mizr; and in the morning they find the harvest completed ; and they say that this is done by beings of a different order from ours.

City of Dongola². Here is the throne of the king. It is a large city on the banks of the blessed Nile, and contains many churches and large houses and wide streets. The king's house is lofty, with several domes built of red brick, and resembles the buildings in Al-'Irâk ; and this novelty was introduced by Raphael, who was king of Nubia in the year 392 of the Arabs (A. D. 1002). In that year³ Abû Rakwah, who is also called Al-Walîd ibn Hishâm al-Khârijî, rebelled against Al-Imâm al-Hâkim bi-amri 'llâh, and attempted to ravage his country ; but Al-Hâkim defeated the rebel ; and his troops Fol. 96 awintered at Takhûm, in Nubia.

'The capital of Nubia is called Dongola (Dumkulah), and this is the residence of the king. It stands upon the bank of the Nile.' (Geogr. Wörtl. iv. p. 82.)

Al-Idrîsî says that Dongola was five days higher up the river than 'Alwah (ed. Rome) [p. 29]. The town is now called Old Dongola to distinguish it from New Dongola or Ordî.

⁴ It seems clear from Olympiodorus, Priscus, Procopius, and Barhebraeus that Christianity was not exclusively accepted among the Nubians before the reign of Justinian I ; but there were Christians there in the fifth century, as the statement of Cosmas Indicopleustes would prove, and probably as early as the reign of Constantine (Abû l-Faraj, ed. Pococke, p. 135), and perhaps even from the time and the religion of the law of Christ was Bahriyâ, son of the king's sister, who was learned in the science of the sphere, and was wise and skilful. (When he was) converted to the religion of Christ, all the blacks of Nubia followed him; and he built for them many churches, throughout the land of Nubia, and many monasteries, which are still flourishing, and some of them are at a distance from the river and some upon its banks.

In the land of Nubia is the city of Ibrîm¹, the residence of the Lord of the Mountain, all the inhabitants of which are of the province of Maris; it is enclosed within a wall. Here there is a large and beautiful church, finely planned, and named after our Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary. Above it there is a high dome, upon which rises a large cross². When Shams ad-Daulah³, brother of Al-Malik an-Nâṣir Ṣalâḥ ad-Dîn Yûsuf ibn Ayyûb the Kurd, brother of Shirkûh, marched into Upper Egypt, in the caliphate of Al-Mustadî, the Abbaside, after the of the Apostles. See the discussion of this question by Letronne in his Mériaux pour l'histoire du Christianisme en Égypte, en Nubie et en Abyssinie, p. 42, &c. It is said that the empress Theodora sent a mission to spread the monophysite doctrine in Nubia; see Gibbon, Decline and Fall, ch. 47. (A. J. B.)

² It is only in remote and desert places that the Copts venture even now to erect a cross over the cupola of a sacred building. Macarius, bishop of Jerusalem, is said to have been the first to set a cross upon a dome, according to Al-Makrîzî. (A. J. B.)

³ Al-Malik al-Mu'azzam Shams ad-Daulah Tûrân Shâh, surnamed Fakhr ad-Dîn, was an elder brother of Saladin. In A. H. 569 he was sent to subdue a rebellion in Yaman. In A. extinction of the Fatimide dynasty, the last caliph of which was Al-'Ādīd li-Dīnī 'llāh, in the month of Jumādā the First, of the year 568 (A.D. 1173), under the government of the Ghuzz and Kurds, he invaded this district¹ with his troops who accompanied him, and with those who gathered together to him [as he proceeded], and he collected the boats from the cataract. In this town [of Ibrīm] there were many provisions and ammunitions and arms, and the [troops of Shams ad-Daulah] marched thither; and when they had defeated the Nubians, they left the town in ruins, after conquering it; and they took the Nubians who were there prisoners. It is said that the number of Nubians was 700,000 men, women, and children; and seven hundred pigs were found here. Shams ad-Daulah commanded that the cross on the dome of the church should be burnt, and that the call to prayer should be chanted by the muezzin from its summit. His troops plundered all that there was in this district, and pillaged the church throughout; and they killed the pigs. And a bishop was found in the city; so he was tortured; but nothing could be found that he could give to Shams ad-Daulah, who made him prisoner with the rest, and he was cast with them into the fortress, which is on a high hill and is exceedingly strong. Shams ad-Daulah left in the town many horsemen, and placed with them the provisions and the weapons and ammunition and tools. In the town a quantity of cotton was found, which he carried off to Kūṣ and sold for a large sum. Before this time, Muḥammad al-Khāzin had captured Ibrīm, in the days of Kāfūr al-Ikhshīdī, under the dynasty of the Abbasides.

§ In the history of the holy church and in the biographies of the fathers and patriarchs it is said concerning Anbā Khā'il, the forty-sixth patriarch, that when money was extorted from him, in the caliphate of Marwān al-Ja'dī, the last of the Omeyyad caliphs, by the emir of Egypt, Ṣalāh ad-Dīn Yūsuf the Kurd², and the patriarch went up to Upper Egypt, to beg for assistance from the people there, and when Cyriacus, king of Nubia, heard of this, he was angry and filled with indignation because the patriarch was thus humiliated and pressed for money; so he assembled his troops and marched towards Egypt¹, accompanied by 100,000 horsemen and 100,000 camels; now Nubian horses are small², like the largest of the Egyptian asses, but have a great power of enduring fatigue. When the Nubians entered Egypt, they plundered and slew, and took many prisoners, and laid waste many inhabited places in Upper Egypt, as they marched towards Miṣr. Now when the ruler of Egypt heard what was the cause of their coming, and was told as follows: 'When the patriarch of Egypt went up to ask assistance of the Christians in Upper Egypt, news of this reached the king of Nubia, and the king of Abyssinia, and [another] king subject to the jurisdiction of the patriarch of Egypt; and [the first-named] was indignant at the news;' then [the governor of Egypt] released the patriarch from his obligations and ceased to extort money from him, and begged him to write to the king of Nubia and bid him return [to his own country]. So the patriarch wrote to the king as he was requested, and the king returned, and no longer acted as he had done, but departed to his own country.

'It was stated to me by one who witnessed it with his own eyes that the horses on which the Nubians rode used to fight in battle both with their forefeet and with their hindfeet, just as their riders were fighting upon their backs. They were small horses, no higher than asses.'

Al-Mas'ūdī also testifies to the smallness of the horses; see Murūj adh-Dhahab, ii. p. 382. Yākūt says that the Nubian king had thoroughbred horses (حيل عتاق), but that the commons (العامة) had slow, heavy horses, of no particular breed (براذين); see Geogr. WörL. iv. p. 411.

Anbâ Joseph¹, the fifty-second patriarch, Ibrâhim, brother of Al-Fol. 97 b Ma'mûn, the Abbaside [caliph], sent a letter to Zacharias, king of Nubia, asking him to send a tribute² of slaves equivalent to the amount for fourteen years. But as the king could not do this, he sent his son George³ to Bagdad, to Ibrâhim. So Ibrâhim rejoiced when he saw him, because, although the king had been prevented from carrying out the request that had been made to him, yet he had sent his son, than whom he possessed nothing dearer; and Ibrâhim also admired the submission of the son, who exiled himself in obedience to his father; and therefore Ibrâhim conferred upon the king all the favours that he asked for, and sent his son back to Misr, where he was lodged at the house of the emir, who was governor of Egypt. Now [George, the son of the king of Nubia,] desired to visit the father and patriarch; and therefore went to see him, with great respect, and received his blessing, and asked him to consecrate an altar for him, that he might carry it to the palace of the emir where he was lodged. So the patriarch granted the request [of the king's son] and sent him a consecrated altar⁴, and sent bishops and priests and deacons to him, who celebrated the liturgy upon the altar, and gave the communion to the king's son and to those who were

² From the time of the caliph 'Uthmân, the Nubians were allowed to live at peace with their Muslim neighbours, on condition of paying a yearly tribute (لُقَاء) of 400 or 360 able-bodied slaves to the caliph. In the time of Al-Ma'mûn this custom fell into desuetude, and for that reason Ibrâhim demanded the arrears of fourteen years, which would have deprived Nubia of a considerable number of men in the prime of life. with him. The governor of Egypt also commanded that the wooden gong should be struck on the roof of [George's] lodging, that his friends might assemble at his house for prayers and the liturgy, as in his own country. This went on until George, the king's son, returned to his father in safety and with honour.

¶ And when the king's son returned to his father, the latter founded Fol. 98 a a large church, which he caused to be skilfully planned, in thanksgiving to God for the safe arrival of his son. This church was [afterwards] consecrated by Anbā George, bishop of Naṭū¹, who was sent by Anbā Christodulus, the sixty-sixth patriarch. This patriarch also asked for assistance from the king, on account of the exactions from which he suffered at the hands of the government and of the Lawātīs, in the year 737² of the Righteous Martyrs (A. D. 1020-1). At the consecration of the church, the Holy Ghost descended upon one of the vessels of water, prepared for the ceremony, and the people saw a light shed upon that water; so the king took that water in his hand, and carried it to his house; and he gave to the bishop money to take to the patriarch, that he might be relieved from the extortion from which he suffered.

§ Church of Al-Wādī. This is called after Saint Onuphrius. [The place where it stands] is called the desert of ³, and is at a distance of three days' journey from the extremity of Nubia, and at a distance of ten days' journey from Uswān. Solomon, king of Nubia, spent his time in worshipping God at this church⁴, after he had abdicated. He said: 'Who is there among the kings that can be saved by God while he still governs among men; and that is not swayed by his passions, and does not shed blood unjustly, and does not force men to do that which is not right for them?' The condition of this king was reported Fol. 98 b to the governor of the southern part of Upper Egypt, Sa'd ad-Daulah al-Kawâsi, in the caliphate of Al-Mustânsîr bi'llâh, and the vizierate of Amir al-Juyûsh Badr; and so the last-named sent men to take the king away from that place, and to bring him to Cairo. And when he came to the gate, he was received with great honour and state, with a band of music, and a fine horse which he should mount; and [the vizier] ordered the chief men of the state to attend upon him; and afterwards he lodged him in a fine house, abundantly decorated with marble and wood-work and brocades of many colours interwoven with gold. In this house the king lived for one year, and [the vizier] visited him constantly, and conversed with him on many subjects, and listened to his words; and found that he sought God, to whom be power and glory, with all his heart and mind, renouncing all that men desire. So when the king had lived here for the space of one year, he died and was buried in the monastery of Saint George at Al-Khandâk¹, in the patriarchate of Cyril, the sixty-seventh patriarch. This king's tomb is within the wall that encloses the church, and is near the door, on the right hand as you enter. It is said that among his letters there was found a letter written in his own hand, and in Nubian characters², which proved his learning and his religion and his asceticism; and he was designated the 'holy king.'

Eutychius, however, speaks of six kinds of writing among the 'Hamites,' and one of these is the 'Nubian' (نوبی), see his Annales, i. p. 55. reigns after his uncle, instead of the son; but if there is no sister's son, then the king's own son succeeds.

The land of Nubia is under the jurisdiction of the see of Saint Mark the Evangelist, which consecrates [their bishops] for them; and their liturgy and prayers are in Greek¹. The number of kings in Nubia is thirteen²; and all these rule the land, under the supremacy of Cyriacus, the Great King; and all of them are priests, and celebrate the liturgy within the sanctuary, as long as they reign without killing a man with their own hands; but if a king kills a man, he may no longer celebrate the liturgy. And this privilege of celebrating the liturgy is never restored to such a king; but when he enters within the veil of the sanctuary, he takes off the royal crown, and stands bareheaded until all the people have communicated, and not one of them is left who has not communicated; and then the king communicates after the people, if he wishes to communicate.

Fol. 99 b § The town of Darmus³, in the land of Nubia. Here there is a church of elegant proportions, beautifully planned, and looking on the river; and within it there is a picture of the Great King, and a picture of the governor of Darmus. [The former picture represents] George, son of Zacharias, king of Nubia, as an old man, sitting upon a throne of ebony, inlaid with ivory, and overlaid with pure gold ; his age is eighty years ; upon his head is the royal crown, set with precious stones, and surmounted by a golden cross, which has four jewels in its four arms.

In the same town there is an ancient temple of great size, dedicated to the star of the Sun¹, within which there is an idol resembling * * *², which has on its breast the figure of the moon, and is all of one piece. In this temple there are most wonderful and astonishing pictures and immense pillars, so that the beholder is filled with wonder and stupefaction because men have been able to construct such works of so great difficulty. In this temple there is also a gigantic hall, which seems to the spectator to be all of one piece ; it is roofed with slabs of hard, black, polished stone, each of which is fifteen cubits in length, five in breadth, and five in thickness ; and of these there are twenty-five, so closely fitted together, that they seem to be one piece. In the same temple there is a well of great width, which is descended by steps ; and if a man descends to the lowest step, he finds vaulted passages, with turnings in different directions, the end of which is unknown ; so that, when he ventures into them, he loses himself, and will perhaps perish, if he do not quickly return.

§ Near the fourth cataract³, on the eastern bank, there is a large Fol.100a monastery, upon a high mountain which overlooks the blessed Nile.

Town of Tâfah⁴. It is said that the prophet Moses, before he went out from the face of Pharaoh, was sent by the latter upon an expedition into the land of the Soudan, to make his way to the extremity of it. Now in this land into which Pharaoh commanded Moses to make his expedition, there were many adders and noisome beasts. But the prophet Moses was wise and was assisted by God in all his actions ; so he marched into the Soudan with his army, accompanied by birds such as cocks and owls, and entered into the uninhabited deserts where the ancient and noisome beasts and reptiles dwelt ; and when they heard the voice of the cocks and of the owls sounding by night and by day, they fled away and remained no longer in their habitations, but vanished from the path of Moses ; and so he marched onwards and saw none of them. Then Moses came to the city of Tâfah, and halted before this city ; and the king's daughter saw him, and the birds with him, and she loved him ; and so she sent messengers to him offering to open the city to him, and pointing out to him the road which he should take in order to conquer the city, and thus she made the capture of the city easy to him. Other writers state that she was the daughter of the king of Abyssinia. So Moses captured the city by offering general quarter ; and he granted immunity to the inhabitants, and they brought him money.

Fol.100b In this city of Tâfah, there is a monastery called the monastery of Ansûn, which is ancient, but so skilfully constructed and beautifully planned, that its appearance has not changed in spite of the lapse of ages. Near it, in front of the mountain, there are fifteen hamlets.

There is a church of the glorious angel Michael, which overlooks the river, and is situated between the land of Nubia and the land of the Muslims ; but it belongs to Nubia. Near it there is a mosque which has been restored ; and also a castle which was built as a fortress on the frontier between the Muslims and the Nubians, and is at the extremity of the Nubian territory.

Philae and Uswân.

Island of Philae¹. Between the land of Nubia and the land of the ¹ The Arabic يَلْقَاب preserves the Coptic ΠΙΛΑΚΩ. The island is mentioned by Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. vi. ; by Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 37] ; by Al-Makrîzî, i. p. 111 ; cf. Amélineau, Géogr. p. 347. We are now returning to Egypt with our author.

Muslims there are two stones upon a hill in the midst of the blessed river Nile; and the Muslims possess, opposite to them, a strong and lofty fortress called Philae. This was built by Barûbâ and Sarâdîb, and contains fortified dwellings, and the ruins of well-built edifices, the work of the ancients. Philae is five miles distant from Aswân.

Next to Philae comes Uswân¹, the large frontier-town and the great caravan-station, and the last post of the Muslims [before you enter Nubia]. In its neighbourhood are the gold mines². In the town there is an ancient temple, containing the figure of a scorpion, which the children are brought to touch every year on the 12th of Barmûdah³; and no scorpion will approach a family which includes a child that has touched that figure of a scorpion. The meaning of the name of Uswân is 'Swallow,' for it was built by the king for a body of Abyssinians whom he made a guard for himself, and since they were voracious in eating, he said to them 'Swallow!' From Uswân to Al-'Ulâ⁴ it is a distance of eighteen days; and to 'Aidhâb a distance of four days.

The monastery called Ibkâh is on a high mountain overlooking the river. Its church is named after the glorious angel Michael; and it has a single dome of great size. It stands between Uswân and Kûş. If any one steals whether little or much of the money which is brought to this church in payment of vows, his boat, if he came in one, will not put off from the shore until he has restored the stolen money; and this is well known among the natives of that district, so that no one now makes any attempt to rob that church.

There is also a church named after the Lady and Pure Virgin

It is said that the Mountains of the Moon¹, where the Nile rises, are of a red colour, and are in the land of Al-Karūbīs; and the country where these mountains are is burnt up with heat, and supports neither plant nor beast.

§ In the land of the Soudan there is a river called the White River, which, when it overflows for a certain length of time, runs into a river called the Black River, which flows into the Nile from the east; and when the White River, which runs into the Nile, rises, then the health of the people of Egypt improves; but when it falls, and the Black River flows [into the Nile], then the people of Egypt fall sick. This Black River rises in a black mountain, and flows over black stones, in an exceedingly black stream. Near the Black River there is a Yellow River, which rises in a mountain as yellow as saffron.

§ The district of Uswān is inhabited by Arabs of the tribe of Rabi'ah and others. In this district there are springs of white naphtha in the mountains, which were found by the son of 'Ain as-Saif, the governor, when he was at Aswān in the year 400 (A. D. 1010). In this neighbourhood is found also the clay called 'clay of art'²; and there is the gold-mine; and there is red and yellow ochre.

§ [There is in this district] a church named after the saint Abū Hadrī³, whose body is preserved within it, but it is in ruins. It stands on the island of Uswān⁴. Near this church there is also a monastery, in which there were three hundred cells for monks, which are now ruined. The church was large and beautiful. There was also the church of Saint Mennas, which was solidly built of stone.

[There is also] a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary, which is exceedingly large ; but it was turned by Al-Hâkim into a mosque.

[There is also] a ruined church of the glorious angel Michael outside Uswân, to the east, upon the mountain ; and the church of the saint and glorious martyr George.

[There is also] a monastery of the saint Abû Hadrî on the mountain on the west ; and it is inhabited by monks. The monastery of Saint Anthony is built of stone. It possessed several gardens, but the Arabs seized them and wrecked the monastery.

There is here a church, named after Saint Ibsâdah¹, which stands in the citadel of Uswân, upon the bank of the blessed river Nile ; and it is said that this saint used to walk upon the water.

In this district there is a black mountain of granite, of which was constructed a bridge² of great length, which was to be placed over the river from one side to the other ; but it has never been completely disengaged [from the quarry], from the time of the giants³ until now ; and it still remains in the form in which they left it.

Ptolemais is the Coptic Psoi (Πετρόπολις), named in Arabic Abfâ'î (ابن ابي), or, by its modern designation, Munshiyah, and still exists a little to the north of Jirjâ. The festival of St. Psôti or Ibsâdah is kept on Kîhak 27=Dec. 23. See Synaxarium at that day ; Zoega, Cat. p. 237 ; Amélineau, Actes des MM. p. 30, and Géogr. pp. 381-383.

² I. e. the well-known obelisk in the ancient granite quarry near Uswân, which although partly hewn into shape has never been detached from the rock. Yâkût mentions the same object, and says it was called the Şakâlah (الصقالة), adding that there is a narrow part of the Nile near the quarries, and that it was related that the intention had been to bridge over the river by means of this obelisk, while others said that it was the fellow to the obelisk of Alexandria. See Yâkût, Geogr. WörL i. p. 211.

District of Isnâ¹. The meaning of this word is 'Tree²', and there was here a tree from India. There is here a church named after Matthew, the pious monk. It is said that when he was appointed bishop of this town of Isnâ, and came to the district, a certain Muslim provided a horse to carry him from the outskirts of the town, until he brought him to the cell where he was to live. And at the weddings and other rejoicings of the Muslims the Christians are present, and chant³ in the Sahidic dialect of Coptic, and walk before the bridegroom through

'When a man of sense beholds these ruins he finds himself able to excuse in the vulgar their belief with regard to the ancients that their lives were longer than ours and their bodies stronger, or that they possessed a magic rod with which when they struck the stones they leapt towards them. For the modern mind feels itself unable to estimate how much was required in these works of knowledge of geometry, and concentration of thought, and ardour of study, and patience in labour, and power over tools, and application to work,' &c. (ed. White, p. 130).

¹ Generally written in English as 'Esneh.' It is now the capital of a province, and in 1885 had 9,422 inhabitants. It was the Coptic ΚΝΗ and the Greek Latopolis. Yâkût says that the only places of importance in Egypt to the south of Isnâ were Udfû and Uswân, and that in his time Isnâ was a flourishing place with much trade. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. 210; Al-Idrîsî (ed. Rome) [p. 49]; Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 172-175.

§ Armant¹. This place was called in ancient times Armanúsah² ; and the name means ‘Blessed spot.’ The town was founded by Būsim the king, son of Capthorim, son of Mizraim, son of Baisur, son of Ham, son of Noah. There is here a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary ; and when an altar was consecrated here in the year 801 of the Righteous Martyrs (A. D. 1084–5), some fragments of the vessels which had contained the water of consecration were taken and thrown into the well within the church ; and the water rose until it filled half of the well ; and the priests marked the limit of the rise of the water, and the mark of it remains until now.

Near this district there is a church, at Al-Khazârah, named after Peter, the chief of the Fathers and Apostles ; and it is written of this church that, when it was consecrated, the water overflowed from the vessels, until it overspread the courtyard of the church.

Near Damâmil³ there is a church named after the saint Anbâ Michael.

⁴ Yâkût gives ‘Andarâ’ as an alternative form. The place is now in the of the daughters of the Copts in the days of Manfā'ūs. There is here a well, square in form, the opening of which measures one hundred cubits on each side; the entrance into it is by steps, which can be descended by camels, oxen, horses, sheep, and all other beasts which drink the water of the well. In this district there is a most wonderful ancient temple, such as has never been seen elsewhere; and it is said that the giants who built this temple also planned the construction of the well.

Kift and Kanâh.

§ The town of Kift¹ is the first town that was built in the land of Egypt; it was founded by Kift, the son of Mizraim, who lived 400 years, and was buried with his treasures in the Oases. From Kift there is a road to 'Aidhâb², and a road to the mine of emeralds, and a road to the Sea of Na'âm³. There is here a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary, in which is preserved the body of the saint Abû Shâj. There is also another church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary; and there is a church of Saint Severus.

There is here a monastery of the Virgin, and a monastery of Saint Sinuthius, and a monastery named after Saint Anthony; and there is a convent of nuns named after Saint George; and a monastery named after the martyr Saint Victor, and two monasteries named after the glorious martyr Theodore.

There is a church named after the angel Gabriel at the top of the mountain in this district. In the middle of [the town] there is a pillar district and province of Kanâ, and in 1885 contained 4,492 inhabitants besides 1,383 Bedouins. It is the Coptic ΚΙΤΕΝΤΩΡΙ and the classical Tentyris or Tentyra. The village of Denderah is well known to tourists, who here meet with the first great Egyptian temple which is to be seen on the voyage up the Nile, and which was as celebrated in the time of our author as it is now. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. ii. p. 11.; Al-Idrîsî (trans. Jaubert), i. p. 125; Al-Makrifî, i. p. 111, cf. p. 11; Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 140-142.

standing by itself, exposed to the sun, and marked with a scale to measure the rise of the Nile, a work of skill, and the result of divine guidance. The 26th of Ba'ūnah¹ is the day on which the sun stood still for Joshua the son of Nun, by God's permission, until he had vanquished the unbelieving Gentiles and giants in battle, through the changing of the sun into various colours and the double halo which appeared round it; and on that day when the sun shines on this pillar, it is known, from the measure indicated by its rays, to what height the Nile will rise that year.

At the top of the hill is Kanāh². In this district there are two monasteries which were restored by the Mu'allim Ishāk, called Al-Azraq, the merchant, who was a native of the town of Kift. One of these monasteries is named after Coluthus, and the other after the glorious angel Michael. They were then in ruins; but the aforesaid merchant spent a large sum upon them, and set them in excellent order, so that the monks came and lived there, to the number of fifty; and he planted near them many trees and vines, and endowed them with property in land, irrigated by water-wheels, and producing vegetables, flax, wheat, and other crops; and the extent of this property was marked out by palm-trees, planted in various places. He also presented forty yoke of oxen for working the water-wheels; and he distributed much money in alms before he died; may God rest his soul!

Fā'ū.

² Kanāh is now the capital of a province, and in 1885 had 15,402 inhabitants. Its Coptic name seems to have been ΚΩΝΗ, and the Copto-Arabic lists give the corresponding Arabic name as قنة. The more usual form, however, would seem to be لقنة, Kanā; and in English it is generally written 'Keneh.' In the time of our author the place was in the province of Kūṣ. The Greeks appear to have called the town Καινη πόλις. See Amélineau, Géogr. p. 393 f.

³ Yākūt names both this place and the monastery of Abū Bakhūm which it

Here there is a monastery and a church named after Saint Pachomius. This church is large and spacious, being one hundred and fifty cubits long and seventy-five cubits broad¹; but it has now fallen into ruin. All the pictures in this church were composed of tessellae of glass, gilded and coloured²; and its pillars were of marble; but it was wrecked by Al-Hâkim.

Kamûlah.

§ Kamûlah³. Here there is a church named after the glorious martyr Theodore. The glorious martyr Mercurius also has a church here; and there are two churches of the two glorious angels Michael and Gabriel. There are also two churches of the two glorious martyrs Saint George and Saint Victor, son of Romanus. There are also two churches of the glorious saints Sinuthius and John Abû Karkâs. There are also here two monasteries of the glorious martyrs Abâ Nûb and Theodore.

possessed. Another Arabic name of the town is Bâsû (باسع), which is nearer to the Coptic φεωτ. The Coptic life of St. Pachomius describes the foundation of the great convent here which bore his name. Fâ'û is now in the district of Dashnâ, in the province of Kanâ, and in 1885 had, if its northern and southern divisions are added together, 4,743 inhabitants, besides 990 Bedouins. See Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. iii. p. ۱۶۹; Amélineau, Géogr. pp. 331–333; cf. his Hist. de S. Pakhôme, p. 70 f.

Al-Ushmûnain.

Uswân and its neighbourhood.

§ The district called the frontier-district of Uswân, which is contiguous to the former district. Here, near the fortress, and on the east side of it, there is a church of the Four Living Creatures, beneath which there is a pool of water; and beside this, it is said that Diocletian, the unbelieving emperor, shed the blood of many martyrs. Around this pool there was a wall, the greater part of which is now ruined.

§ The island of Bakîk, to the west of [Uswân]. Here there is a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary, containing several chapels, the greater part of which are ruined. There is also a church of the saint and glorious martyr Theodore.

§ Island of Philae. Here there are many idols and temples. The island contains two churches, one of which is named after the glorious angel Michael, and the other after the patriarch Athanasius; these churches are beside the cataract.

The House of Sanîs stands on the bank of the river, to the west of [Philae]; and near it there are several churches overlooking the river, but now in ruins.

§ It is said that at Bashâwah there is a garden, the property of Ibn Kâmil, which contains a wonderful palm-tree, such as has never been heard of elsewhere; and its peculiarity is that it casts off unripe dates, of which the kernel is eaten, and makes the most delicious food, while the outside is thrown away; and this is well known, and is related in the book of An-Nasr ibn Zûlâk.

Kamûlah.

§ At Kamûlah² there is a monastery named after the glorious angel

Michael, and known as the monastery of the Well, because in its neighbourhood there is a well of excellent water, from which travellers drink when they pass through this district. The monastery contains a keep, and is surrounded by an enclosing wall; and it is said to possess the body of Saint Pisentius, superior of the monastery in Upper Egypt.

§ Bū Harūkah. Here there is a monastery named after the glorious angel Michael, which contains a keep.

Luxor.

§ Luxor¹. Before the gate of this town there are idols standing like castles². Some of them have the forms of lions or rams, and are standing upon their feet in two rows, on the right and on the left. They are [carved] out of hard black stone which is polished. Within the town there are also great idols of hard black stone without number.

Abyssinia.

§ Abyssinia. This country is under the jurisdiction of the see of Mark the Evangelist³. Abyssinia is the same as the kingdom of

¹ The Arabic form Al-Akṣurain, the dual of Al-Akṣur (الْأَكْسُور), was often used as the name of the place, e.g. in the Synaxarium, and the Copto-Arabic lists of places. The form Al-Akṣur, however, is used by Yākūt and Al-Makrīzī, and is now vulgarly pronounced 'I-Akṣur' (Luxor). The Coptic name of the place is ΠΑΠΕ; and the modern village, as it is well known, occupies part of the site of the ancient Thebes. See Yākūt, Geogr. Wörterb. i. p. ۲۷۴; Al-Makrīzī, i. p. ۱۰۰; Ibn Dukmāk, v. p. ۱۰۰; Amélineau, Géogr. p. 234 f.

² The text has 'like that,' apparently referring to the signification of Al-Akṣur, which may be taken, as Yākūt remarks (loc. cit.), as a 'plural of paucity' of the word kaṣr (کسر) 'a castle.' The following passage is obviously intended for a description of the avenue of sphinxes which leads to the temple of Karnak.

³ As Tellez remarks:

‘Depois que os Abexins tiveram notícia da Fé de Christo nunca tiveram mays que hum só bispo em toda Ethiopia, ao qual elles chamam Abuná, que quer dizer Padre nosso. ' Since the Abyssinians have had knowledge of the Faith of Christ, they have never had more than a single bishop in all Ethiopia, whom they call Abund, which signifies "Our Father." The first of all was Saint Frumentius, of whom we have spoken above; and as that Saint was sent from Alexandria by Saint Athanasius, so, from that time onward, all the other bishops or Abúnás have been sent from the same patriarchal see, down to our own times, in which Rome despatched certain patriarchs, as we shall see further.' (Hist. geral de Ethiopia a alta ... composta na mesma Ethiopia pelo Padre M. d'Almeyda ... abreviada pelo Padre B. Telles, &c., Coimbra, 1660, p. 93.)

Josephus speaks of the queen of Sheba as 'queen of Egypt and Ethiopia' (Ant. viii. 6); and Origen, St. Augustine, and St. Anselm, among others, believed that she was an Ethiopian sovereign.

² Compare below, fol. 108 b, where it is said that Abyssinia and India are identical.

metropolitan of the Abyssinians ordains priests and deacons for them. The king of Al-Mukurrah¹, who is an Abyssinian, and is an orthodox king, is the Great King among the kings of his country, because he has an extensive kingdom, including distant regions in the north of the country, and has many troops; and he is the fourth of the kings of the earth, and no king on earth is strong enough to resist him; and at a certain place in his country he possesses the Ark of Noah².

Fol. 105b All the kings of Abyssinia are priests, and celebrate the liturgy within the sanctuary, as long as they reign without slaying any man with their own hand; but after slaying a man they can no longer celebrate the liturgy; and the conditions by which they are bound after they have killed a man have already been spoken of in this book³.

If any of the Abyssinians commits a sin, he takes a handful of incense of the kind which is burnt within the sanctuary; it is composed of frankincense, of sandarach, of styrax, of ladanum, of mastic, of aloes, and of cassia; then he confesses his sin over [this mixture], and throws it into the censer⁴, together with dried rose-leaves.

All the kings of Abyssinia are crowned with the royal crown⁵ in announce the death of the metropolitan, and to request that his successor might be appointed. This is related by 'Abd al-Laṭīf, who says:

وَرَدَ فِي شَوَّالٍ رَسُولُ مَلَكِ الْبَشَّةِ وَمَعَهُ كِتَابٌ يَنْصَمِنُ مَوْتُ مَطْرَانِهِمْ وَيَنْتَمِسُ عَوْزَهُ

'In the month of Shawwâl an envoy arrived from the king of the Abyssinians, bearing a letter which contained the announcement of the death of their metropolitan, and requested the appointment of his successor' (ed. White, p. 196).

⁴ Cf. above, fol. 8 a and 9 b, with notes.

the church of the angel Michael, or the church of Saint George, beneath their pictures. After that the king does not wear the crown, but the metropolitan blesses him, and lays his hand upon his head, and fastens a band over his head and beneath his chin, and clothes him in a robe of brocade.

The Abyssinians possess also the Ark of the Covenant¹, in which are the two tables of stone, inscribed by the finger of God with the commandments which he ordained for the children of Israel. The Ark of the Covenant is placed upon the altar, but is not so wide as the altar ; it is as high as the knee of a man, and is overlaid with gold ; and upon its lid there are crosses of gold ; and there are five precious stones of South-west Arabia, from the time of Hamyar, the supposed ancestor of the queen of Sheba ; see Wright, Christianity in Arabia, p. 15. (A. J. B.)

upon it, one at each of the four corners, and one in the middle. The liturgy is celebrated upon the Ark four times in the year, within the palace of the king ; and a canopy is spread over it when it is taken out from [its own] church to the church which is in the palace of the king : namely on the feast of the great Nativity, on the feast of the glorious Baptism, on the feast of the holy Resurrection, and on the feast of the illuminating Cross. And the Ark is attended and carried by a large number of Israelites descended from the family of the prophet David¹, who are white and red in complexion, with red hair. In every town of Abyssinia there is one church, as spacious as it can possibly be.

It is said that the Negus² was white and red of complexion, with red hair, and so are all his family to the present day ; and it is said that he was of the family of Moses and Aaron, on account of the coming of Moses into Abyssinia. Moses married the king's daughter³.

³ This sentence is out of its place in the text.

⁴ The Coptic eucharistic loaf, which is also leavened, is on the contrary stamped with a design of crosses, each enclosed within a square border. The part in the middle is called the Isbodikon or Spoudikon (ΙΣΒΩΔΙΚΩΝ or ΣΠΟΥΔΙΚΩΝ a corruption of δεοποικόν), and the former appears in the Arabic Ibddikdn, e.g. in the modern (1886) Cairo edition of the Coptic Liturgy in the rubric before intinction. Round the central design of the wafer are the words Holy, Holy, Holy Lord (Ἄγιος Ἄγιος Ἅγιος κυριος) or the like. See Vansleb, Hist. de l'Église d'Alex. p. 99 f.; Butler, Coptic Churches, ii. p. 278 seq.

Tellez says of the Abyssinians :

'Detraz da Igreja para a banda do Oriente esta sempre h̄ia cazinha, a qual he a casa das hostias, & nella ha apparelho para se fazerem ; & vem a ser a

§ The Abyssinians use vinegar with water for their communions, or water¹ alone; yet this is not from want of wine, but is a custom inherited from their ancestors.

hostia hum bolo fermentado, o qual se nam guarda d' hum dia pera o outro, & se espantam de nós nam fazermos as hostias pera cada dia.'

'Behind the church, at the east end, there is always a chamber which is the bakehouse for the eucharistic loaves, and in it there is the apparatus for making them; and the eucharistic loaf when it is made is a leavened cake, but is not kept from one day to another; and they are scandalized at our not making fresh hosts every day.' (Hist. geral de Ethiopia a alta, p. 97.)

The casinha of which Tellez speaks corresponds to the bakehouse (بيت عجین) attached to the Coptic churches, as we have seen above, fol. 30 b, &c. (A. J. B.)

'O vinho que preparam pera a missa vem a ser d' esta maneyra; trazem quatro ou cinco passas como ja toquey, que tem guardadas, as quays desfazem, quebrando as com os dedos em hum pucaro de agoa, mayor ou menor, conforme á quantidade da gente que ha de commungar; porque todos commungam sub utraque specie; & o mays certo he que sub neutra, porque evidentissimo he que a materia aqui nam he vinho, senam agoa, poys hum pucaro de agoa nam se pode tornar em vinho só com cinco ou seys passas.'

'The wine which they prepare for the Mass is made in the following manner: they bring four or five raisins, as I have already mentioned, which they keep in store, and these they crush by squeezing them with the fingers in a cup of water, larger or smaller according to the number of communicants; for they all communicate sub utraque specie, or more probably sub neutra, for it is abundantly clear that the element here used is not wine but water, since a cup of water cannot be changed into wine by the mere addition of five or six raisins.' (Hist. geral de Ethiopia a alta, p. 97.)

Alvarez states the same fact; see Lord Stanley's translation, pp. 25, 28, and 412. The statement of Tellez is repeated by Ludolphus; see his History of Ethiopia made English by J. P. Gent, Bk. III. ch. 6. Danhauer also states that the Abyssinians used a chalice of raisin wine (vinum ex uvis, defectu vini ex recentibus uvis expressi, passis mira arte expressum), quoting Zagazabo as his authority.

Our author agrees with Tellez that such a chalice is in reality one of water, not wine. (A. J. B.)

In Abyssinia there are many Muslims, each of whom pays a tax of three *aftkhalls*¹ of iron, and these are like a broad spit, and have at the end the impression of the king's seal.

Fol.106b The king possesses, among his treasures, the throne of king David, upon which he sat to give judgment; and upon it, all round it, and upon all its sides, there are crosses of gold.

The fathers and patriarchs used to write letters to the kings of Abyssinia and Nubia, twice in the year; and the last of them who did so was Zacharias, the sixty-fourth patriarch; for Al-Hâkim forbade the practice, which ceased from that time until now. Nevertheless when a letter comes from any of these kings to the caliph at Miṣr or his vizier, he bids the patriarch write a reply to the letter, with all the respect and reverence due from Christians, and all the compliments which are customary among them. The patriarch charges the king of Abyssinia to avoid association with the Muslims, who are under his government. Formerly it was customary with all the kings of Abyssinia as well as their subjects to have several wives². This continued until the patriarchate of Anbâ Sinuthius, the sixty-seventh patriarch³; who commanded the metropolitan to bring them back from this mode of life to the mode of life existing among the Christians of Egypt and Syria, and not to authorize the king and his subjects to do as they were then doing ; and after this the Abyssinians refrained from following their former custom, and began to have each of them one wife only.

² Danhauer's testimony on this point agrees with Abû Ṣâliḥ's: 'reges olim sex aut septem habuerunt uxores, aulici communiter duas aut tres, ceteri pro lubitu prout res domestica fert, alteram priori addunt aut superaddunt tertiam.' The priests, however, were never allowed more than one wife (Eccl. Aethiop. cap. v. § 3). Alvarez (Lord Stanley's trans. p. 45) seems to say that in places polygamy was common, and was not forbidden by the 'king or magistrates,' but only by the church. Yet 'every man who has more than one wife does not enter the church nor receive the sacrament; and they hold him to be excommunicated.' But the ban is easily removed. (A. J. B.)

[This patriarch] also established that in the rite of consecration of churches the same customs should be followed as in all the churches of Egypt ; and he bade the metropolitan direct the Abyssinians to slay at the completion of the building of a church twelve beasts¹, namely four oxen, four sheep, and four goats, three at each side of the church ; and that they should distribute [the flesh] of all [of them] on the day when they ceased from the building of the church, as a gift to God who had helped them to complete a house in which offerings should be made to him and in which his name should be commemorated, and supplications and prayers and praises should be offered.

sixty-fifth patriarch, occupied the see in the first half of the eleventh century.
(A. J. B.)

¹ This custom of sacrificing animals at the consecration or completion of a church is quite unexampled in Coptic church history and quite against the Coptic canons. It can only mean, I think, that the patriarch sanctioned the maintenance of a purely Abyssinian practice. From the earliest times there were large Jewish settlements in Abyssinia, and it is probable that the custom of religious sacrifice derived from the Jews remained after the conversion of the people to Christianity, just as it remained and remains among the Arabs after their conversion to Islam. It must be admitted, however, that the Copts also retained the custom of slaying if not of sacrificing animals on certain solemn occasions. Lane instances the killing of a sheep or lamb at the bridegroom's house on the evening of a wedding, when the animal is slaughtered at the door and the bride steps over its blood ; and he mentions that at Christmas, Epiphany, and Easter, when the Copts pay regular visits to the tombs of their relatives, a buffalo or sheep is commonly slain and given to the poor as an act rather of charity than sacrifice. (Mod. Egyptians, ii. pp. 292, 296.) But the Muslim sacrifices are far more numerous and more distinctly ritual in character (op. cit. i. pp. 67, 116, 302 ; ii. 221, 259, 268). The present writer has seen Muslim sacrifices with a propitiatory purpose both in Egypt and in Asia Minor.

Saint Thomas.

§ The church of Thomas the Disciple and his holy hand, with which he touched the Lord's side, and which is still living, as a witness to the resurrection of the living Christ from the dead, and of his ascension into heaven. This hand is part of the body of Saint Thomas, which lies in a church upon one of the Indian¹ islands in the salt sea, which has been described by travellers among those things that are celebrated among men down to our own day.

North-western Africa.

§ Western Africa. The gospel was preached in this country by Philip the Apostle², whose name means Lover of Horses. [There is in

² The statement that St. Philip preached in north-western Africa, especially at Carthage, is in agreement with some of the apocryphal Acts of that Apostle; see Acta SS. at May 1; Lipsius, Die apocr. Apostelgeschichte, iii. p. 32 ff.; Wright, Apocr. Acts of the App.; Coptic Synaxarium at Hatûr 18=Nov. 14; Conflicts of the Holy App., translated from the Ethiopic by Malan, pp. 66–76. The Greek accounts make St. Philip die at Hierapolis in Syria, and the Syriac account merely describes his mission to Carthage and says nothing of his death there. The Coptic Synaxarium, however, is more explicit, and states that the Apostle was put to death in Africa, and that an angel carried his body away to Jerusalem; but that subsequently the people all became Christians, and prayed to God that he would restore the sacred relics to them, which was miraculously accomplished.

The country still further west is inhabited by Romans; and much snow and hail falls there, and men and beasts die there.

Carthage. Here is buried the body of the aforesaid Philip.

Spain.

Spain is the seat of the dominion of the Muslim Berbers of the Fol.107b west; and at its extremity is the seat of the kingdom of the Roman Franks.

§ The book of *Al-Khitat bi-Miṣr*¹ relates that when 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣi², the emir of Egypt, captured the fortress of Toledo in Spain, in the month of Rajab of the year 93 of the Arab dominion (A. D. 712), through the agency of Mūsā, he found there a crown³ which was said to be the crown of Solomon the son of David, and also his table which was of gold encircled with gems, and was worth alone 200,000 dinars; and besides this he found money and valuable treasures and precious jewels and vessels and arms beyond all price.

² This is an error, probably of the copyist and abbreviator. Mūsā was not despatched to Spain by 'Amr, who had in fact died more than fifty years earlier.

³ The capture of these treasures of Solomon by the Arabs on the conquest of Toledo is related by several historians. See e.g. Al-Makkarī ed. Dozy, &c. i. p. 141; Al-Makīn, Hist. Sarac. p. 85. Yākūt says that Toledo (Tulaitulah or Tulaitalah) had been visited by Solomon, Alexander, and Jesus Christ. The treasures of Solomon were famous in Europe before the Arab conquest of Spain. Procopius (De Bello Goth. Bk. 1) says that among the spoils carried away from Rome by Alaric were the ornaments of Solomon, the king of the Hebrews, remarkable for the brilliancy of the sapphires with which they were incrusted. They had, he says, been captured at Jerusalem by the armies of Titus, and they were taken by Alaric from Rome to Carcassonne. From this city they must have been carried off by the Visigoths to Toledo. Cf. Gibbon (ed. 1838), iv. p. 129. (A. J. B.)

The Miraculous Olive-tree.

The place called *Anṣar wa-A'jab*¹ is near Marea², there being a distance of three days' journey between them. Here is the church of the Pure Lady and Virgin Mary. The biographies [of the patriarchs] relate that at the door of this church there stands an olive-tree which has no green leaves upon it³; but that on the day of the festival of that church, at sunrise, this tree becomes green while all the people are looking at it, and its branches spread, and its leaves unfold, and fruit appears upon it; and the fruit deepens in colour and grows and multiplies until the middle of the day when the tree is covered with olives. Then the priest in charge of the church comes out, and takes some of the olives, which he presses, and with the oil of which he lights the lamps. And the people who are assembled pray, and receive the communion, and disperse to their own homes. Afterwards the priest in charge of the church collects that which is left of the olives, and has them pressed; and they supply the church with sufficient oil for lighting the lamps during the whole year. This [story which has been related] was written by the sheikh Abū 'l-Barakāt Mauhūb ibn Mansūr ibn Mufarraj, the Alexandrian deacon, in the biography of Anbā Christodulus, the sixty-sixth patriarch.

North-western Africa.

The City of Darkness. Between this and the town of Al-Ikrān there is a river called the Jarjar, the width of which is 300 miles [or] 100 parasangs⁴.

¹ I. e. 'Most remarkable and most wonderful.' The ψ has been omitted before ظرفان.

§ The town called Al-Lūzariķū¹ is in North-western Africa, near Carthage; and Paul² the Apostle preached and founded several churches there. One of the latter is a church named after the Pure Lady; it is 3,000 great cubits in length, and 1,153 cubits in breadth. The river [Jarjar] was divided at this [town of Al-Lūzariķū], and thirteen different paths were made through it. This [town] was seen by Peter, chief of the apostles, when he visited it, according to the testimony of the Fol.108b Book of Clement. The people of this town used to keep the feast of the idols on the 12th of Īyār, every year; and on this day they wove roses into garlands and placed them on the heads of their idols, and offered them fresh honey³ and fartk as-sabtī from among their stores.

There was in the town of Al-Lūzariķūn a talisman⁴ upon the walls, which warned the people of the approach of a stranger, and then they forbade him to enter. That river [Jarjar], at the prayer of Paul, was

'I arrived there on the 12th of the month of Īyār, and on that day the people of that city were keeping a great festival, on which they made wreaths of roses and placed them on the heads of the images and they offered to the idols young leeks from their stores.' (MS. Bodl. Or. 294, p. 303.)

هنا غريب قد اتاك

'Here is a stranger who is come to you!' (loc. cit.) divided by thirteen paths, and he baptized in it 18,000 men of the city, and they built several large churches; and Paul broke the talisman of which we have spoken; and at his prayer God planted the olive-tree from which the oil is pressed which serves for lighting the lamps of the churches in this city.

India.

§ India. In this country there is neither heat nor cold, because it is on the equator. It is the land of Abyssinia¹, which is also called Al-Hindah. All its inhabitants worship the Buddhas² and the sun and the fire. It is the land of India, and its shores are far from Egypt; it is very extensive, and contains a multitude of inhabitants; it is surrounded by the seas and the expanse of waters, over which ships pass from the coasts of Egypt; and, on land, India lies next to the frontiers of Persia.

(A. J. B.)

³ The question of the mission of St. Thomas to India is discussed at length in Germann, Kirche der Thomaschristen. The Syriac Acts of St. Thomas containing an account of this mission were published by the late Dr. Wright in his Apocr. Acts of the App., London, 1871, and they are probably as early as the second or third century in their present form. The name of the king Gondopherres or Gundaphorus is confirmed through modern research as that of Undopherres, who was reigning about half a century after Christ in the valley of the Indus. Cf.

the greatest of the twelve, who was sent thither, announced to the people the message of salvation. This glorious apostle converted them from the worship of idols to the knowledge of the truth and the way of salvation; and he baptized them in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and they received from him the orthodox faith and built many churches. He ordained over them, as bishops, priests, and deacons, those of whose constancy in the faith which they had received from him he was assured; and he taught them the rules of religious worship, and the consecration of the holy mysteries, and the rite of offering incense during their prayers and liturgies. So he led them to the knowledge of God. He also performed startling signs and extraordinary wonders before them, such as they had never seen or heard of, and confirmed their faith, until they abandoned the worship of idols and the offering of sacrifices to them, and learnt from the Source of intelligence the extent of their errors and of the falsity of their beliefs. Thus when the minds and hearts of these people were enlightened, they set themselves to build a church to the great Thomas, who had been their guide; and in this church which they erected to the great apostle Thomas, from whom they had received the orthodox faith, God manifested a great sign to them; for, when the building of the church was completed, God sent the sea which covered the road leading to the church. And when this apostle was martyred, and had finished his fight, and obtained the crown of martyrdom, his body was carried to this church; and they placed it in a chest of skilful workmanship, and overlaid it with gold. And when they saw this other wonder after his martyrdom, namely that his right hand was not changed from its former appearance during life, they marvelled, and their faith was strengthened; so they made an opening in the chest through which his holy hand came out, as a manifest sign to all who saw it. Now the sea which had covered the road to the church went back from it every year; for God sent a wind which drove the sea back from the road, which was thus laid open for the assembling of the congregation at the festival of Thomas. For men came thither from all parts and walked along the road to the church, as the children of Israel walked, when the Red Sea was divided for them, under the guidance of the prophet Moses who prayed for them before the Lord. So God showed a similar sign in our own time, through the prayers of this great apostle and his great dignity in the sight of the Lord, who confirmed his teaching by so mighty a miracle, which has never ceased. Thus the people who assemble at this great festival, celebrate it and receive blessings; and the priests

¹ This story of the communion of St. Thomas is to be found related by an oriental prelate who visited Pope Calixtus I at Rome in A.D. 1122, and who is called in the accounts John, patriarch of India. Two independent narratives of this visit exist; one in the Chronicon Alberici Monachi published in Leibnitz, Accessiones Historicae, ad ann. 1122; and the other in Mabillonii Vetera Analecta in a letter written by Abbot Oddo of St. Rémy to a Count Thomas. Oddo says that he was present at the 'patriarch's' interview with the Pope. He states, according to the testimony of the Indian prelate, that the church of St. Thomas was surrounded by a river, but that eight days before and eight days after the festival of the apostle the water retreated so that the church could be reached on foot over dry land; the body of the saint was seated upon the bishop's chair, and received in its open hand the offerings that were made, unless a heretic approached, when the hand at once closed. Albericus, whose account varies somewhat from Oddo's, adds that the host was handed to the apostle during the mass, and that the people received the communion from his open hand, which, however, closed on the approach of a misbeliever. See Germann, op. cit. p. 165 ff.

Another account of this communion-scene is to be found in the Itinerary of John of Hesse, who appears to have travelled in the fifteenth century, but who places the relics in the city of Hulna, four days from Edessa. Ulna is also the name given by Albericus to the episcopal city of John of India. The 'Itinerary' states that Prester John dwelt at Edessa. The body of St. Thomas was placed in the episcopal throne, and the communion is thus described:

'Missa igitur finita Presbyter Joannes, archiepiscopi et ceteri praelati religiosi cum aliis hominibus christianis devote geniculando, et humillime se inclinando receive the holy mysteries out of the palm of that pure hand, and they continue to communicate in this manner one after the other until the hand grasps one of the congregation ; then they all glorify God, and the priests communicate the rest of the people. Afterwards the priests carry that chest in their hands with chanting and with great rejoicing, and set it again in its place, after the people have kissed it and been blessed by it. When this religious service is over, and as the people are about to disperse, they are blessed by that man, whom God has chosen out of the people to remain for a year in the service of that pure body, to keep the candles lighted before it night and day. The people also leave with him all that he can need, and all depart to their own homes. And when they reach the shore, and not one of them is left behind, then the sea returns as it was before, and covers the road to the church. This custom has continued without interruption for ages. When the people return the following year, they find that that man, who was left to serve the body of Saint Thomas, has died at that very hour and is still warm¹. Praise to God, who is great and glorious in his saints, and works miracles for their sakes. To him be glory !

Town of Kûlam². All the Christians who live here are Nestorians. Fol. 110 b

There is here a church of the Lady and Pure Virgin Mary ; and a church of the glorious saint and great martyr Saint George.

Fahṣûr¹. Here there are several churches ; and all the Christians here are Nestorians ; and that is the condition of things here. It is from this place that camphor comes ; and this commodity [is a gum which] oozes from the trees. In this town there is one church named after our Lady, the Pure Virgin Mary.

Arabia.

Ṣan'â² in Al-Yaman. Here is the church called Al-Kalîs, which was founded by •Ibrâhîm³, who ruled Al-Yaman on behalf of the Negus, king of Abyssinia, and is the same as Abrahâ al-Ashram⁴, whose nose was mutilated in battle, so that he was named Al-Ashram. He built this church, and decorated⁵ it with gilding and beautiful paintings, and in his article on China (الصين), i. pp. ۱۶۶-۱۷۰. The Portuguese discovered a church at 'Coulam' built by 'disciples of St. Thomas ;' see Barros, op. cit. p. 235.

² The capital of Yemen (Al-Yaman). See Yâkût, Geogr. Wörter. iii. p. ۴۸.. Yemen was conquered before the birth of Mahomet by the Christians of Abyssinia ; see the account given by Gibbon in chap. xlvi and Johannsen's Historia Yemanae, Praef. The story is clearly told in Thos. Wright's Early Christianity in Arabia, p. 89. (A. J. B.)

³ Generally called Abrahah by the Arab historians ; see At-Tabarî, Ta'rîkh ar-Rusul wa'l-Mulâk (ed. De Goeje and others), prima series, pp. ۱۳۱-۱۳۲. He is famous as the general who attacked Mecca in the year (A.D. 570) in which the prophet Mahomet was born, the year called, from the elephant which accompanied the army of Yemen, the Year of the Elephant. Our author's description of the church of Al-Kalîs is much fuller than that given by At-Tabarî, op. cit. p. ۱۳۴ ff. (A. J. B.)

⁵ At-Tabarî says :

فَبَنَاهَا بَنَى مُعْجِبًا لَمْ يَرَمِلَهُ بِالذَّهَبِ وَالْأَصْبَاغِ الْمُعْجِبَةِ وَكَتَبَ إِلَى قِيَصَرِ يَعْلَمَهُ أَنَّهُ يَرِدُ بَنَاءً كَنِيسَةٍ
بَصْنَعًا يَبْقَى اثْرَهَا وَذَكْرَهَا وَسَأَلَهُ الْمَعْوَنَةَ لَهُ عَلَى ذَلِكَ فَاعْنَاهُ بِالصَّنَاعَةِ وَالْفَسِيفَسَاءِ وَالرَّخَامِ

and paved it with coloured marble and [set up] marble pillars ; and all the time he was living and sleeping in the church. He adorned it with the most beautiful ornaments of gold and silver and gilded and coloured glass, and he overlaid the doors with plates of gold studded with silver nails, and silver studded with massive gold nails ; and on the doors Fol. 111 a leading to the altars he put broad plates of gold, and he set them with precious stones, and in the midst of each plate he set a golden cross, in the centre of which was a red, transparent carbuncle ; and around these jewels were flowers of open work in various colours, so that spectators were astonished at it. And Abrahâ bid men make pilgrimages¹ to that church, and so they flocked thither from all parts. And he made for it a screen of skilful workmanship, composed of ebony and sâsam-wood, inlaid with pure white ivory, beautifully carved². So the fame of this church spread over that country, and those who had not seen it heard of it, and multitudes made pilgrimages thither, and brought votive offerings ; and many men lodged in the church and spent day and night there ; and the king provided for those that lodged there, and built chambers for them to dwell in, and erected houses which he made the property of the church. This king was a wise man, learned, loving God and doing good to men, just in his judgments, good in his life, honoured by all kings, without enemies who feared him, on account of the goodness of his life ; according to the testimony of Fol. 111 b the history of Aṭ-Ṭabarî.

'He built this church in marvellous fashion, such as had never before been seen, with gold and wonderful paintings ; and he wrote to Caesar to tell him that he intended to build a church at Ṣan'â, to be a monument of lasting fame ; and he begged Caesar to help him in the work ; and so Caesar sent him workmen and mosaics and marble' (p. 110). 'Caesar' was the emperor Justinian I. Cf. Wright, op. cit. p. 95. (A. J. B.)

Marûr ad-Dair. This is a church inclosed within a strong wall ; and it is now called Maḳbarat al-Ḥukamâ¹. In this district lived Abû Sharwân, the emir of Al-Yaman under Chosroes.

Thamânîn.

The village called Thamânîn². The mountain of Ḳardâ³ is in this neighbourhood, and here the ark rested in the time of Noah, and went up from the mountain called Al-Jûdâ. It is very high, so that there is no higher mountain on earth than it ; and from it there is a view of the four corners of the earth. The Pentateuch bears witness that God, to whom be praise, sent a wind upon the earth ; and the waters decreased, and the fountains of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped, and the waters were abated after 150 days ; and the ship or ark of Noah rested in the seventh month, on the twenty-seventh day of the month, upon the mountain of Ḳardâ at a village called Thamânîn, according to that which has already been said.

Cities built by unknown Founders.

Among the buildings of which the founder is unknown, and which I mention to preserve the memory of them, is Ghumdân⁴, now a heap of ruins, such as are unknown elsewhere. 'Uthmân overthrew it in the days of Islâm, but its ruins remain until now. Aryât⁵, the Abyssinian, Fol. 112 a who conquered Al-Yaman for the Negus, king of Abyssinia, laid Ghumdân waste with other cities, before the appearance of the Muslims.

Sanâ in Al-Yaman and Iştakhr¹ in Fars and Al-Ailah in Al-'Irâk are in the desert.

The history of Al-Manbajî relates that king Solomon, son of the prophet David, king of Israel, was valiant and a great conqueror and was feared and magnified, and yet was gentle and humble, merciful, chaste, quiet of spirit and free from anger or hatred; and that he built Tadmor², and made wonderful things there, and named it City of the Sun; and that he built Durrah³, which is in the midst of the sea; and built a great altar near the city of Kîrûn.

The city of Aukîr was built by Kîrûn of stones overlaid with gold; and among the stones of the mountains of that country there are some that shine like gold, like golden and copper marcasite. When the building of this city was finished, it presented a wonderful sight when the sun shone upon it, unlike any other on the earth.

City of Khauliyâ. This was built by a king called Jiyûl, and he made its structures lofty. It became a great city, and was inhabited by the women, to the time of Solomon, son of the prophet David, upon whom be peace!

Here ends the work of the author of this history. For he was unable to make his work complete on account of the extent of the surface of the earth in the east and in the west; yet he collected matter which no other has collected, and he devoted extreme care to his work. Nevertheless he was concise in his exposition, because he shunned in his narrative all amplification that was not necessary.

² Tadmor was said, like Iştakhr and Ghumdân, to have been built by demons for Solomon; see Yâkût, Geogr. Wört. i. p. 111. The passage of Al-Manbajî may be found in the Bodleian MS. Hunt 4178, fol. 102 b.

§ That poor, wretched, feeble slave, the copyist, has copied what he found in his copy, without addition or subtraction, according to the direction of the Shaikh¹ Ar-Ra'is al-Akram Abū 'l-Faraj, son of the Shaikh Raphael, son of the priest Abū 'l-Farābī, surnamed Şandık al-'Ilm. This priest was the chief of the priests at the church of Al-Mu'allakah in the Fort of Ash-Shama' in the city of Misr. This book describes how the priest Abū 'l-Ma'âbī, son of the priest As-Sabī Abū 'l-Faḍā'il, son of the priest Al-Muhdab, celebrated the liturgy on the Feast of the Cross, in the church of Al-Mu'allakah, on the 17th of Tūt, and placed his finger in the chalice, and it was immediately dyed with natural blood². When the priest saw this great miracle, he was serving

Fol. 113a as a scribe in the Divan of the frontier-district of Alexandria, but he gave up his work and lived in his cell at the said church, with a covering always over his finger, and thus he lived until he died. May the Lord rest his soul, and have mercy upon us by his prayers!

§ The work of copying this book was finished on Wednesday, the 2nd of the month of Ba'ûnah in the year 1054 of the Blameless Martyrs, which corresponds to the 8th of Dhû 'l-Ka'dah of the year 738 (A.D. 1338). May God give us a good end to this year!

§ That poor slave the copyist has attempted to abbreviate the book, as it has been said, without diminishing from the sense, but the task has been too great for him. He prays all those who read the book to accept the excuse from him who offers it. May God, who assists the right, help us all towards the salvation of our souls, and support us in temptation and in the trials of this life, and preserve us in the orthodox faith, and bring us in safety to the harbour of salvation. Amen. Praise to God for ever and ever!

APPENDIX.

ACCOUNT OF THE MONASTERIES AND CHURCHES OF THE CHRISTIANS OF EGYPT;

FORMING THE CONCLUDING SECTIONS OF THE KHITĀT OF AL-MAKRĪZĪ (DIED A. H. 845=A. D. 1441).

IBN SīDAH says: Ad-Dair (monastery) is an inn (khān) of the Christians, in the plural *Adyār*¹; and the superior of it is called Dayydr or Dairān. I remark that Ad-Dair is among Christians the special dwelling-place of the monks, and Al-Kantsah (church) is among them the place of assembly of the people for prayer.

1. *Al-Killiyah*², the Cell at Miṣr³. This Killiyah stands beside the Mu'allakah in the Ḫaṣr ash-Shama' in the city of Miṣr, and is the place of assembly of aged monks and learned Christians, and its rules are followed by all the monasteries.

2. The Monastery of Turd is also known as the Monastery of Abū Jurj, and stands on the bank of the Nile. This Abū Jurj is the same as Saint George, and is one of those whom the emperor Diocletian persecuted that he might renounce Christianity; but as various tortures, such as scourging and burning with fire, did not bring about his perversion, his head was cut off on the 3rd of Tishrī, which is equivalent to the 7th of Bābah.

3. Monastery of Shārān. This monastery stands at the boundary of the district of Ṭurā, and is built of stone and brick; there are palm-trees here; and many monks are to be found here. It is also called the Monastery of Shahrān, and Shahrân is said to have been one of the learned Christians or else a king. Formerly this monastery was known under the name of Mercurius, who is also called Markûrah or Abû Markûrah; but afterwards, when Barşûmâ ibn at-Tabbân lived here, it was called the Monastery of Barşûmâ. A festival is kept here in the fifth week of the Great Fast, at which the patriarch and the principal Christians assemble, and large sums are expended upon it. That Mercurius [whom we have mentioned] is one of those whom Diocletian caused to be put to death on the 19th of Tammûz, which is equivalent to the 25th of Abîb; he was a soldier.

³ I. e. Fustāt Miṣr or Al-Fustāt, now called by Europeans 'Old Cairo.'

4. The Monastery of the Apostles. This monastery stands at the extremity of the district of As-Suff and Al-Wâdi¹, and is an old and small monastery.

5. Monastery of Peter and Paul. This monastery stands near Iṭfîh towards the south, and is a small monastery; there is a festival here on the 5th of Abîb. It is also known by the name of Monastery of Al-Kâṣrîyah. Peter is the greatest of the apostles and disciples; he was a tanner or a fisherman, and was condemned to death by the emperor Nero on the 29th of Ḥazîrân, which is equivalent to the 5th of Abîb; and Paul was a Jew, but accepted Christianity after the ascension of Christ, and invited others to adopt his religion; so the emperor Nero put him to death a year after the death of Peter.

6. The Monastery of Al-Jummaizah is also known as the Monastery of Al-Jûd; and sailors call the place Jazâ'ir ad-Dair (Islands of the Monastery), and it is opposite to Al-Maimûn² and west of the Monastery of Al-'Arabah; it is built in the name of Saint Anthony, who is also called Anṭûnah; he was a native of Kaman, and when the persecution of Diocletian was over, and he had escaped martyrdom, wished to substitute for it a discipline which should lead to a similar reward. So Anthony consecrated himself to the service of God, and was the first who introduced the monastic life among Christians instead of martyrdom: he fasted forty days and nights without taking food or drink, and watched through the night; and this he did during the Great Fast every year.

7. *Monastery of Al-'Arabah*³. This is reached by a three days' journey on camels, and is among the eastern mountains; between it and the Sea of Al-Kulzum

² Al-Maimûn and Kaman were two places in the district of Bûṣîr in the province of Al-Jizzah.

³ This is the famous monastery of St. Anthony, near the Red Sea.

(Red Sea) there is a full day's ride ; almost all kinds of fruits are cultivated there, and it has three wells of running water. It was founded by the afore-mentioned Saint Anthony. The monks of this monastery fast all their lives, but their fast only lasts till the afternoon, when they take food, except at the Great Fast and the *Barmâldî*¹, when their fast lasts till the stars come out. Al-Barmâldî means in their language a fast of this kind.

8. *The Monastery of Saint Paul*², also called Monastery of the Sons of Paul, or Monastery of An-Namârah. This monastery lies in the country west of Aṭ-Ṭûr (Sinai), near a spring of water where travellers halt. They have a legend that Miriam, the sister of Moses, when he encamped with the Israelites in the neighbourhood of Al-Kulzum, purified herself at this spring. Saint Paul was a native of Alexandria, and his father left to him and his brother a large fortune ; but when his brother quarrelled over it he left him in his anger. Then he saw a corpse about to be buried ; and this made him ponder, and he went forward meditating upon it through the country, until he settled beside this spring ; and here he remained, and God supported him. Then Saint Anthony came, and remained with him till he died, and this monastery was built over his grave. Between this monastery and the sea there is a distance of three hours' journey ; it has a garden in which are palms and vines and a stream of running water.

9. Monastery of Al-Kuṣair. Abu 'l-Hasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ash-Shâbushtî says in his Book of the Monasteries : 'This monastery stands upon the mountain on a level spot on the summit, and is a monastery of fine solid architecture, in a pleasant solitude ; it is inhabited by monks, and has a well hewn in the rock from which the water is fetched for it. In the sanctuary is the picture of Mary on a panel, and the people visit the place to see this picture. In the upper story there is a hall, built by Abu 'l-Jaish Khamârawah ibn Aḥmad ibn Tūlūn, with four windows on four sides ; he often visited this monastery, and admired the picture, because he thought it so beautiful and thirsted to behold it. The way to this monastery from Miṣr is very difficult, but the way from the south is very easy both in ascent and descent ; on the side stands a hermitage, which is never quitted by the hermit who lives there. The monastery rises above the village of Shahrân, and above the plain and the Nile ; the former is a large and populous village on the bank of the river, and Moses is said to have been born there, and placed by his mother in an ark in the water ; but there is another monastery which is called Monastery of Shahrân. This Monastery of Al-Kuṣair is one of the monasteries which are much visited, and is one of the favourite pleasure-resorts on account of its fine position, and because it overlooks Miṣr and its environs.' Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam says in his Book of the Conquest of Egypt : 'There are different opinions about Al-Kuṣair; according to Ibn Lah'ah it is not the fortress of Mūsâ (Moses) the prophet, but of Mūsâ the magician ; but on the other hand Al-Mufaddal Faḍâlî gives a tradition from his father, who says : "We came to Ka'b al-Āḥbâr, who asked us, Whence are you? We answered, From Egypt. He said, What do you say about Al-Kuṣair? We answered, It is the castle of Moses. He answered, It is not the castle of Moses, but the castle of the 'Azîz¹ of Egypt, who, when the Nile rose, betook himself to this elevated spot, and therefore the place from the mountain to the river is holy." Others on the contrary say that a fire was kindled here for Pharaoh, when he travelled from Memphis to 'Ain-Shams (Heliopolis), and on the Muḳatṭam hills there was another fire ; so when the people saw the fire they knew that he was travelling, and kept in readiness whatever he stood in need of ; and similarly when he made the return journey from 'Ain-Shams. God knows best !' The learned Christian historians say that Arcadius, emperor of the Romans, summoned Arsenius to teach his son ; but Arsenius thought that the emperor wished to kill him, and therefore fled to Egypt and entered the monastery ; the emperor then sent a man to say that he had only required him to instruct his son ; but Arsenius begged to be spared, wandered over the country as far as the Muḳatṭam hills, east of Ṭurâ, and remained three days in a cave until he died. Arcadius, when Arsenius was dead, sent and caused a church to be built over his tomb, and this is the place known by the name of the Monastery of Al-Kuṣair, and is now called the Monastery of the Mule, because a mule supplies it with water. When the mule leaves the monastery, it goes its way to the water, and there a man stands who fills the vessel with water, and when he has done that, lets the mule loose and it returns to the monastery. In the month of Ramadân of the year 400, Al-Hâkim bi-amri 'llâh ordered that the Monastery of Al-Kuṣair should be destroyed ; and the destruction and plundering of it lasted several days.

10. *Monastery of Saint John*¹. Ash-Shâbushtî says: ‘The Monastery of Saint John lies on the bank of the Lake of Al-Habash, near to the Nile, and beside it are gardens, some of which were laid out by the Emir Tamîm ibn al-Mu’izz, — and a pavilion built on pillars, of fine architecture, with paintings, also constructed by the Emir Tamîm. Near the monastery is a fountain called the Fountain of Mammâtî; near this stands a great sycamore, under which the people assemble and drink, and this place is a place of constant amusement, dancing, and pleasure, and is equally pleasant in the days of the rise of the Nile when the lake is filled, and during the time when the fields are full of crops and all is green and flourishing; it is much resorted to by the people, who amuse themselves here. Poets have sung of the beauty and charm of this district; and this monastery is now called the Monastery of At-Tin.’

11. Monastery of Abû ’n-Nâdâ. This monastery stands near Anşinâ, and is one of the old buildings of that city; its church is in a tower, not on the ground, and the monastery bears the name of Saint John the Dwarf. A festival is kept there on the 20th of Bâbah. This Saint John will be further mentioned in the sequel.

12. *The Monastery of the Cave of Shakalkîl*² is a small monastery, hanging on the mountain and hewn of stone, on a rock below which there is a steep precipice so that it can neither be reached from above nor below. There are no steps, but there are incisions cut in the mountain-side; and if any one wishes to ascend a long pole is let down to him, which he grasps with both hands, and by placing his feet in the incisions so ascends. The monastery contains a mill driven by an ass. The monastery, which rises above the Nile in view of Manfalût and Umm al-Kuşûr, stands opposite to an island surrounded by water called Shakalkîl, on which are two villages, one called Shakalkîl, the other Banî Shakîr. The monastery keeps a festival, at which Christians assemble, and bears the name of Saint Mennas, one of the soldiers persecuted by Diocletian, in order that he might abjure Christianity and worship idols; but as he remained constant in his faith, Diocletian caused him to be put to death on the 10th of Hazîrân or 16th of Bâbah.

13. Monastery of Saint Victor, on the dam of Abnûb, east of Banî Murr³, below the mountain, at a distance of about 1,250 ells. It is a large monastery, at which a festival is kept, whereupon the Christians of the country from east and west assemble, and the bishop is present. This Victor was son of Romanus. His father was one of the generals of Diocletian, and he himself a distinguished and brave man, respected by the emperor; but when he adopted Christianity, the emperor tried to turn him to idolatry by promises and threats, and on his refusal had him put to death on the 22nd of Nisan or 27th of Barmudah.

14. The Monastery of Buqturshū¹, north of Abnūb, is a small monastery, but deserted, and has long been visited by the Christians only once in the year. Buqturshū was one of those who were tortured by order of Diocletian, that he might fall away from Christianity; he refused, however, and was put to death on the 20th of Hatūr. He was a soldier.

15. Monastery of Abū 's-Sarī, built in the name of Saint George, near Al-Ma'sarah, in the district east of Banī Murr. At times it is deserted by the monks, and at times inhabited by them; and at a certain season a feast is celebrated.

16. Monastery of Saint George of Khamās. Khamās is the name of a town, north of which the monastery stands; two festivals are kept there yearly, in which an innumerable multitude of people take part.

17. Monastery of At-Tair (the Birds). This monastery is ancient, stands far above the Nile, and has a flight of steps to it cut out in the rock. It stands opposite to Samallūt. Ash-Shābushtī says: ‘In the district of Ikhmīm there is a large, populous monastery, which is visited from all parts, in the neighbourhood of a mountain called Mountain of Al-Kahf (the Cave). At a place in the mountain there is a cleft, and on the festival of the monastery no Abūkīr bird remains in the neighbourhood without coming to this place; and from their numbers, their assemblage, and their cries, a great tumult arises beside the cleft. Without ceasing, one after another puts his head into the cleft and cries and comes away, until one of them sticks fast in the cleft, and he beats with his wings until he dies; and then the rest depart, so that no bird remains there.’ The Cadi Abū Ja'far al-Kudā'i says: ‘Among the noteworthy features of Egypt is the ravine of the Abūkīrs near Ushmūm in Upper Egypt. This is a ravine on a mountain, in which there is a cleft at which the Abūkīrs on a certain day of the year assemble, and betake themselves to the cleft ; and as soon as one of the Abûkîrs has stuck his bill into the cleft he goes away ; and this does not cease until the cleft has held one of them fast, whereupon they all depart ; but the bird that is caught in the cleft remains hanging until he falls to pieces.' The author, upon whom may God have mercy, adds : 'This is one of the things that have long ceased to happen.'

18. The Monastery of Bû Harmînah is north of Kâ'û al-Kharâb ; and to the north of it lies the ancient temple of Kâ'û, full of wise inscriptions. Between the Monastery of At-Tair and this monastery there is a journey of about two days and a half. This Bû Harmînah was one of the earlier monks, famous among the Christians.

19. Monastery of the Seven Mountains, near Ikhmîm. This monastery stands at the entry of seven valleys, and stands high between high mountains ; and the sun rises upon it two hours later than generally on account of the height of the mountain, at the foot of which it stands ; and when there are yet two hours before sunset the inhabitants think that the sun has already set and the night has begun, and they kindle lights. Near this monastery there is a spring of water at the exit overshadowed by a willow, and this spot where the Monastery of the Willow stands is called Wâdî 'l-Mulûk (Valley of the Kings), because there a plant grows called Mulâkah, like the radish, by which water is coloured of a deep red, and it is used by chemists. Above this monastery stands

20. The Monastery of Al-Karkas, on a mountain, and hewn in its side ; and there is no approach to it, but the ascent is by incisions cut in the rock, and by them alone can it be reached. Between the Monastery of the Willow-Spring and the Monastery of Al-Karkas there is a journey of three hours, and below the Monastery of Al-Karkas is a well of fresh water surrounded by Bân-trees.

21. The Monastery of Şabrah, east of Ikhmîm, is named after an Arab tribe named the Şabrah, and dedicated to the angel Michael ; but there is only one monk there.

22. The Monastery of Abû Abshâdah (Psôti), the bishop, near the district of Atfah, stands on the dam and opposite to Munshât Ikhmîm, in the west. This Abû Abshâdah was one of the learned Christians.

23. The Monastery of Saint Or, the monk, also called Monastery of Sawâdah. The Sawâdah were a tribe of Arabs who settled here. The monastery stood opposite to Munyah Banî Khaşîb, and was destroyed by Arabs.

All these monasteries stand to the east of the Nile, and belong to the Jacobites, and besides them there are no others on the eastern side of the Nile ; but on the western bank there are many monasteries, because it is very populous.

24. The Monastery of Damūh, in the province of Al-Jizah, also called Damūh as-Sabā', is built in the name of Saints Cosmas and Damian, and is a small monastery. The Christians state that a wise man called Sab' lived at Damūh, and that the church of Damūh, which is now in the hands of the Jews, was one of the monasteries of the Christians, which, in a state of great need, they sold to the Jews. The church of Damūh has already been mentioned. Cosmas and Damian were among the learned Christians and pious monks, and many things are related of both of them.

25. Monastery of Nahyā. Ash-Shābushtī says: 'Nahyā is in the province of Al-Jīzah. The monastery there is one of the finest, most charming, and best-situated monasteries of Egypt, and one of the most beautiful spots inhabited by monks; it commands a wonderful view of the Nile, which surrounds it on all sides. When the water sinks, and the seed is sown, the earth brings forth rare flowers and different sorts of blossom. Nahyā is one of the favourite resorts for pleasure, and has a canal at which all kinds of birds assemble, and many fish are caught. Poets have described it, and sung of its beauty and charm.' I remark, however, that this monastery has been destroyed.

26. Monastery of Tamwaih. Yākūt gives this pronunciation, and adds: 'There are two places of this name in Egypt; one is in the province of Al-Murtāhiyah, and the other in that of Al-Jizah.' Ash-Shābushtī says: 'Tamwaih is on the west bank, and stands opposite to Hulwān, and the monastery commands a view of the river, and is surrounded by vineyards, gardens, palms and trees, forming a populous pleasure-resort. It has a fine view of the Nile; and when the earth grows green, it lies between two carpets—the water and the crops. It is one of the best-known places of pleasure and resorts for refreshment in Egypt.' Ibn Abī 'Āsim al-Miṣrī has the following verses in the metre of Al-Basīt:

'O that I could drink at Tamwaih of the bright juice, which brings into contempt the wines of Hīt and 'Ānāt¹,
In flowery meadows
where the brooks flow between gardens!
The clusters of the red anemone which bloom there seem to be cups of wine appearing in close succession;
The flowers of the narcissus there, from their beauty, seem to be eyes secretly communicating by signs;

¹ Two towns on the Euphrates. Hīt is the Is of Herodotus; and 'Ānāt is the Anatho, Anathan, or Betauna of classical writers.

The water of the Nile, over which the zephyr passes, seems to clothe itself with ringed coats of mail.
 Hospitable chambers in which I have been sorely tempted in heart, when you were formerly my wineshops and my hostels;
 Behold! I shall not cease to beg for the morning draught, when the clappers¹ strike, in my love for the monasteries.'

I remark: this monastery bears among the Christians the name of Saint George, and the Christians of the neighbourhood assemble there.

- 27. The Monastery of Aksâs, more correctly Aksâhs, is now destroyed.
- 28. The Monastery at the extremity of the district of Manharah stands in bad repute, because the monks give no one food from thence.
- 29. The Monastery of Al-Khâdim (the Servant) is near the canal of Al-Manhî, in the district of Al-Bahnâsâ, and is built in the name of the angel Gabriel. It possesses gardens containing palms and olive-trees.
- 30. The Monastery of Ishnîn, named after the district of Ishnîn, stands to the north of it, is a small monastery, and bears the name of the Virgin Mary; but it only contains a single monk.
- 31. The Monastery of Jesus, or Yasîf, is also called the Monastery of Arjanûs. There is a festival here on the 25th of Bashans. On the night of this day a spring there, bearing the name of Jesus' Spring, is closed; and at the sixth hour of the day people collect and take away the stone from the well, and then they find that the water within it has risen and now begins to sink again; and from this they reckon how high the Nile will be that year, counting from the point to which the water of the well rose to the level to which it sinks.
- 32. The Monastery of Sadmant, at a short distance from Al-Manhî, on the high ground between the Fayyûm and the Rîf, bearing the name of Saint George, has lost much of its former estate, and is now partly deserted.
- 33. The Monastery of An-Naklân, also called Monastery of Al-Khashabah, and Monastery of the Angel Gabriel, stands under a hollow in the mountain, called Târif al-Fayyûm; and this hollow is among them known by the name of Jacob's Shade. They state that Jacob, when he came to Egypt, sought shade within it. This mountain rises high above two places: Itfîh Shallâ and Shallâ. The water for this monastery is drawn from the canal of Al-Manhî, and it lies below the

Monastery of Sadmant. At the festival celebrated in this monastery, the Christians of the Fayyûm and other places assemble; and it lies on the road leading to the Fayyûm, which, however, is only followed by few travellers.

34. Monastery of Al-Kalamûn. This stands in a plain under the mountain-pass of Al-Kalamûn, through which the traveller reaches the Fayyûm, and which is called the Pass of Al-Gharâk. This monastery was built in the name of the monk Samuel, who lived in the time between Jesus and Mahomet, and died on the 8th of Kîhak. In this monastery there are many palms, from the fruit of which the 'Ujwah'¹ is prepared. Here is also the Labakh-tree (Persea), which is only found here; its fruit is of the size of a lemon (malum citrinum), its taste is sweet like the Rânjîj (nux Indica), and its kernel is used for many purposes. Abû Hanîfah says in the Book of Plants: 'The Labakh only grows at Anqinâ. It is a tree from which ships' planks are sown; it sometimes excites nose-bleeding in the man who saws it; and if two planks of it are fastened closely together and placed for a year in water, they join themselves together and become one plank.' In this monastery there are two towers built of stone, both high, large, and brilliantly white; and within it there is also a well of running water, and outside another well. In this valley there are a number of old praying-places, one of which is the valley of Umailih, where there is a running spring and fruitful palms, the fruit of which is gathered by the Arabs. Outside this monastery there is a salt-marsh, the salt of which is sold by the monks of the monastery, so that these districts are provided with salt therefrom.

35. The Monastery of the Virgin Mary outside Tunbudhâ contains only one monk, and does not stand on a frequented road. In the district of Al-Bahnâsâ there were many monasteries now destroyed.

36. Monastery of Bâl Fând, north of Banî Khâlid, built of stone, and of fine architecture. It belongs to the district of Al-Munyah, and formerly there were a thousand monks here, but now only two; it lies on the dam below the mountain.

37. The Monastery of Bâlîjah, at a short distance from Al-Manhî, belongs to the inhabitants of Daljah, and was one of the largest monasteries, but is now ruined, so that it only contains one or two monks. It stands opposite to Daljah, at about two hours' distance.

38. Monastery of Saint Mercurius or Abâ Markârah. This monastery stands below Daljah, at the exit from this place towards the east. No one now remains there.

39. The Monastery of Sanabû, at the exit from this place towards the north, bears the name of the Virgin Mary; it is now deserted.

40. The Monastery of Saint Theodore, to the south of Ṣanabû, has entirely fallen into decay on account of the poverty of the Christians there.

41. The Monastery of Ar-Rairamân, in the eastern part of the district of this place, which lies to the east of Mallawî and to the west of Anzinâ; and it bears the name of the angel Gabriel.

42. The Monastery of Al-Muharrak. The Christians state that Christ stayed at this place six months and some days. A great festival is kept here, called the feast of Olives, besides the feast of Pentecost, at which a great multitude assembles.

43. The Monastery named Dair Ban' Kalb is so called because the tribe of the Banû Kalb settled around it. It bears the name of Gabriel, but no monk remains therein; for it is now only a church for the Christians of Manfalût, to the west of which city it stands.

44. Monastery of Al-Jâwaliyah. This monastery stands at the extremity of the district of Al-Jâwaliyah, towards the south, and bears the name of the martyr Mercurius, also called Markûrah. It has revenues from land, and votive offerings and gifts are brought to it; every year two festivals are kept there.

45. Monastery of the Seven Mountains. This stands on the summit of the mountain which rises to the west of Usyût on the banks of the Nile; it is also called the Monastery of Saint John the Dwarf. Several festivals are kept here; but the monastery was destroyed in A. H. 821 by a mob which fell upon it by night. Saint John the Dwarf was a monk and an abbot, of whom many stories are told; among others, that he at the bidding of his teacher planted a dry stick in the ground, and watered it for a time, and then it became a fruit-tree, of which the monks ate; and it was called the Tree of Obedience. He is buried in his monastery.

46. The Monastery of Al-Muṭill. This bears the name of the Virgin Mary, and stands beside the mountain, below the Monastery of the Seven Mountains, opposite to Suyût. A festival is kept there, to which the inhabitants of the district come; but no monks remain there.

The Monasteries of Udrunkah. The neighbourhood of Udrunkah is one of the Christian districts of Upper Egypt; and the Christians living there are learned in their religion and in expounding the Coptic language; and they possess many monasteries outside the city towards the east, beside the mountains ; but most of these are destroyed. Among those still existing is

47. The Monastery of Saint George, a well-preserved building, but containing few monks. At certain times a festival is celebrated there.

48. Monastery of Ard al-Hâjîs (the district of the Dam), [also called] that of Michael or that of Karfûnah, which bears the name of the Virgin, and is also named Arfûnah or Aghrafûnâ, which means Scribe (γράφων) ; for the copyists of learned books of the Christians had their seat here in ancient times ; it stands on the side of the mountain, in which there are many caves, in one of which a man may wander for two days.

49. Monastery of Bû Baghâm, below that of Karfûnah on the Dam. Bû Baghâm was a soldier in the days of Diocletian, and adopted Christianity, and was scourged that he might abjure his faith. He was put to death on the 28th of Kânûn the First, which is equivalent to the 2nd of Kîhak.

50. Monastery of Saint Severus on the Dam of Udrunkah, named after the Virgin. Severus was a respected monk, who was made patriarch ; and at his death a miracle took place. He had foretold to the monks, when he went to Upper Egypt, that when he should die the mountain would split, and a great piece of it fall upon the church, without injuring it ; and one day a piece of the mountain fell, as he had said, and then the monks of the monastery knew that Severus was dead ; and when they reckoned up they found that that event corresponded to the time of his death ; and they called the monastery from that time after his name.

51. Monastery of Saint Theodore, below the Monastery of Saint Severus. Severus and Theodore were two soldiers of Diocletian : one was called the slayer of the dragon, the other was commander of the troops ; both were put to death as others were put to death.

52. Monastery of Minshâk or Minsâk or Bant Sâk or Îsâk, which bore the name of the Virgin Mârihâm, i. e. Mâr Maryam (Saint Mary) ; and afterwards was known by the name of Minsâk, who was an old monk celebrated among them. Below this monastery there is a well on the dam of which the monks drink ; and when the Nile rises they drink the water out of it.

53. The Monastery of the Apostles below that of Minsâk is also called the Monastery of Tamarisks. It belongs to the district of Bûtij ; while the Monastery of Severus belongs to the inhabitants of Rifah, that of Karfûnah to the inhabitants of Suyût, and that of Saint George to the inhabitants of Udrunkah. The Tamarisk monastery stood in a desert place, but a small village was built beside it, called Munsha'at ash-Shaikh (new building of the Shaikh), because the Shaikh Abû Bakr ash-Shâdâlî laid the foundation of it; and he also laid out a large garden, on the site of which he had found a well, containing a treasure. An eye-witness told me that, among the gold, four-cornered dinars were found, having a cross represented on one of their sides, and the weight of each dinar was $1\frac{1}{2}$ mithkâl.

The above-mentioned Monasteries of Udrunkah stand near to one another, and between them are numerous caves in which there are tablets painted with characters in the old style, as in the ancient temples, adorned with different bright colours, and containing manifold learning. The Monastery of the Seven Mountains, that of Al-Muṭîll, and that of the Scribe stood outside Suyût among the caves, and on both the dams there are said to have been 360 monasteries, and the traveller went from Al-Badrashain to Asfûn, continually in the shade of the gardens. Now this part is laid waste, and deserted by its inhabitants.

54. Monastery of Mûshah. Mûshah stands to the south of Suyût. The monastery is dedicated to Thomas, the Apostle of India, and stands among the gardens in the neighbourhood of Rîsfah. When the Nile rises, it can only be reached by boat. It has several festivals. The Christians of these monasteries generally understand the Sahidic dialect of Coptic, which is the chief branch of the Coptic language; after it follows the Buhairic (Memphitic) dialect. The Christian women of Upper Egypt and their children can hardly speak anything but the Sahidic dialect of Coptic; they have, however, also a perfect knowledge of the Greek language.

55. Monastery of Saint Macrobius. Abû Makrûfah is the name of the place where this monastery stands. It is hewn out at the foot of the mountain, and there are many caves in it; it bears the name of the Virgin. Among the Christians of Makrûfah there are many shepherds and herdsmen, who however are usually savages, and few among them can read or write. The monastery lacks water.

56. Monastery of Bû Baghám, before Timâ, the inhabitants of which are Christians, and were formerly learned men.

57. The Monastery of Saint Sinuthius, also called the White Monastery, stands to the west of the district of Sûhâj. It is built of stone, but is now in ruins, and only the church remains. It is said to have possessed land to the extent of $4\frac{1}{2}$ feddâns, of which only one feddân is left. It is an ancient monastery.

58. The Red Monastery, also called that of Abû Bishâ'î, stands to the north of the White Monastery, at a distance of about three hours, and is a small monastery built of red brick. This Abû Bishâ'î was a monk and contemporary of Sinuthius, who was his pupil, and under him were 3,000 monks; he had another monastery also in the desert of Shfîhât.

59. The Monastery of Bû Misâs or Bû Musîs (Μωσῆς), i.e. Moses. This monastery stands below Al-Bulyanâ, and is a large monastery. This Saint Moses was a monk, born at Al-Bulyanâ, and is revered there, and counted a saint; they relate many histories of him which deserve no credit.

After this there remain only the scantily-inhabited monasteries on the Dam of Isnâ and Nakâdah. At Asfûn there was a large monastery; and Asfûn itself was one of the finest towns of Egypt; and the most fruitful district of Upper Egypt; and the monks of the monastery there were famous for their learning and intelligence. With Asfûn, its monastery also was destroyed; and this was the most remote of the monasteries of Upper Egypt; but they are all destroyed and forgotten, though in former times they were so populous and their monks so numerous, their estates so large, and the offerings made to them so valuable.

As for the northern provinces, there were many monasteries there which have been destroyed; but some still remain. Near Al-Mâks, outside Cairo, towards the north, there were several churches which Al-Hâkim bi-amri 'llâh Abû 'Alî al-Mansûr caused to be destroyed on the 19th of Dhu 'l-Hijjah, A.H. 393; and he gave away all that was in them, and thus much was plundered from them, after he had, in the month of Rabî' the First of the same year, already destroyed the churches of Râshidah, east of the city of Miṣr, and instead of them had built a mosque which is known as Râshidah. Then he destroyed in A.H. 394, two churches in the same place, and forced the Christians to wear black garments and a girdle, took away the possessions of the churches and monasteries and gave them to the Divan of the government, burnt a number of crosses, forbade the Christians to decorate the churches on Palm-Sunday, oppressed them and had many of them scourged. In the island of Raudah there was a church near the Nilometer, which was destroyed by Aṣ-Ṣâliḥ Nijm ad-Dîn Ayyûb in A.H. 638. In the district of Abu 'n-Numrus there was a church, the destruction of which was suggested by a man from Az-Ziyâlî'ah, because he had heard the sound of the wooden gongs with which on the Friday night announcement was made in that church. During the reign of Al-Malik al-Ashraf Sha'bân ibn Husain he had been able to do nothing against this on account of the respect in which the Copts were held; then he allied himself with the great Emir Barkûk, who was administrator of the government, until he destroyed the church with the help of the Cadi Jamâl ad-Dîn Muḥammad al-'Ajamî, superintendent of the market at Cairo, on the 8th of Ramadân in the year 780. It was turned into a mosque.

60. The Monastery of Al-Khandak (the Moat), beyond Cairo, towards the north, was built by the commander Jauhar instead of a monastery which he had destroyed in Cairo, in the neighbourhood of the mosque of Al-Aḳmar, where the well is which is now called Bi'r al-'Azamā and was formerly called Bi'r al-'Izām (well of bones), because he had the bones contained in that monastery carried away and brought to the Monastery of Al-Khandak. On the 24th of Shawwāl, A. H. 678, in the reign of Al-Malik al-Mansūr Kalā'ūn, this monastery was destroyed, but afterwards it was renewed; and he also built two other churches which shall, if God will, be described below among the churches.

61. The Monastery of Cyriacus. This monastery was also known by the name of Saint Or, and a festival is kept there at which the people assemble. A wonder took place there, related as follows by Ash-Shābushtī. If a man had the scrofula (khandzir) the superior of the monastery took him, made him lie on his side, and brought a pig (khinzir) to him, which licked the sore place, and devoured the tumours, but without touching the healthy part; when the part was clear of the disease, the superior, after strewing upon it some of the ashes of a pig which had already been employed for a similar operation, anointed the man with the oil from the church-lamp, and thus he was healed. Then the pig which had eaten the tumours of the sick man was taken, slain, and burnt, and its ashes were prepared for a similar treatment. The monastery therefore was much visited by those who suffered from this complaint, and it contained a large number of Christians.

62. The Monastery of Atrib, also called by the name of the Lady Mary, keeps a festival on the 21st of Ba'ūnah; and Ash-Shābushtī relates that on this festival a white dove comes and flies into the sanctuary; they do not know whence it comes, and only see it on that day of the year. I remark that this monastery has been destroyed so that only three monks are left, but the people still assemble on that festival; the monastery lies on the bank of the Nile, near Banhâ al-'Asal.

63. Monastery of Al-Maghṭas (the Tank) is beside the saline marshes, near the lake of Al-Burlus, and hither Christians make pilgrimages from the north and south of Egypt, as to the Church of the Resurrection. This takes place on a festival kept in the month of Bashans, which they call the Festival of the Appearance, because they state that upon this day the Virgin appeared, and they relate many things which are to be accounted lies. Beyond this monastery there are no buildings except a small building towards the south-east; and in the neighbourhood is the salt-marsh from which the Rashidic (i. e. of Rosetta) salt is obtained. This monastery was destroyed in Ramadān, A. H. 841, during a rising of some fakīrs who joined together for the purpose.

64. The Monastery of Al-'Askar (the Troops) is in the salt district, at a day's distance from the Monastery of Al-Magħtas, under the name of the Apostles; in its neighbourhood is the salt-marsh from which the Rashidic salt comes; only one monk remains.

65. The Monastery of Jamyānah, named after Saint George, is near the Monastery of Al-'Askar, at three hours' distance; the festival there falls closely after that of the Monastery of Al-Magħtas; no one now lives there.

66. The Monastery of Al-Maimah, near that of Al-'Askar, was formerly in excellent circumstances, and in old times there was no monastery in the north which had more monks than this; but its prosperity died away and it was destroyed; then the soldiers settled there and it was rebuilt. Besides these four monasteries there is no other in the salt district.

As for Wâdī Habib, also called Wâdī 'n-Naṭrûn, or the desert of Shihât, or the desert of Aşkit, or Mifzân al-Kulûb, there were formerly there 100 monasteries; but afterwards only seven remained, spread out towards the west of the plain lying between the province of Al-Buhairah and the Fayyûm, where sandy flats alternate with salt-marshes, waterless deserts, and dangerous rocks. The monks took their drinking-water from cisterns, and the Christians brought them presents and alms. At the present day the monasteries are in ruins. Christian historians relate that 70,000 monks from these monasteries met 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî, each carrying a staff; when they had declared their submission to him, he wrote to them a letter which still exists among them. One of them is

67. The Monastery of Saint Macarius, the elder, a famous monastery among them, and near it lie four ruined monasteries. This was formerly the monastery of the pious monks, and a patriarch was not recognized by them until they had made him take his seat in this monastery, after he had sat upon the throne in Alexandria. It is said that there were 1,500 monks here, but now there are few. There are three saints named Macarius: the greatest, who was abbot of this monastery, Saint Macarius of Alexandria, and Saint Macarius the bishop; and their bones are kept in three hollow pieces of wood, and are visited by the Christians of the monastery. Here is also the letter, written by 'Amr ibn al-'Âṣî to the monks of Wâdī Habib, about the treasurership of the northern districts, as it has been related to me by one who had heard it from a man who had seen it there. Saint Macarius the elder received the monastic rule from Anthony, the first among them who wore the monkish cap and the Askim, which is a band of leather with which the monks alone gird themselves, and upon which there is a cross. He met Anthony on the eastern mountain-range, where the Monastery of Al-'Arabah is, and remained for some time with him; and then Anthony clothed him with the monastic habit and bid him go to Wâdi 'n-Nâtrûn and there take up his abode. He did this, and a great number of monks assembled around him. They relate of him many noble deeds, among others that he fasted during the whole of the forty days, without tasting food or drink, and also watched through the nights; moreover he prepared palm-leaves and fed upon them, and never ate fresh bread, but he took old shoes, softened them in a mess of palm-leaves, and ate of them, together with his monks, so long as his breath remained, without anything more; this was their food during their whole life until they died. Saint Macarius the Alexandrian wandered from Alexandria to the aforesaid Macarius, and became a monk through him. Next was Saint Macarius the third, who became a bishop.

68. The Monastery of Saint John the Dwarf is said to have been built in the time of Constantine, son of Helena. This Saint John possessed notable qualities, and was one of the most famous monks. The circumstances of this monastery were very favourable, and many monks lived there; but now only three monks are left there.

69. Monastery of John Kamd,

70. Monastery of Elias, which belonged to the Abyssinians; both of these are destroyed, for the worms injured their wood-work, so that they fell to pieces. Then the Abyssinians went to

71. The Monastery of the Virgin of Saint John the Dwarf, which is a small monastery near that of Saint John the Dwarf.

72. Near these monasteries stands that of Saint Anûb, now likewise destroyed. This Saint Anûb was a native of Samannûd, and was put to death at the beginning of Islam, and his body is placed in a house at Samannûd.

73. The Monastery of the Armenians near these monasteries is destroyed.

74. In their neighbourhood stands also the Monastery of Bû Bishâ'i, greatly revered among them, because this Bishâ'i was one of the monks who belong to the class of Macarius and John the Dwarf. It is a very large monastery.

75. A monastery opposite to that of Bû Bishâ'i formerly belonged to the Jacobites, but for 300 years has been in the possession of the Syrian monks, and is now in their hands. The place where these monasteries are is called Birkat al-Adyirah (Lake of the Monasteries).

76. Monastery of the Virgin of Baramûs, dedicated to the name of the Virgin Mary; there are some monks there.

77. Opposite to it stands the Monastery of Moses or Abû Mûsâ the Black, also called Baramûs; this monastery is dedicated to the Virgin of Baramûs, so that Baramûs is the name of the monastery. A story is told of it as follows: Maximus and Domitius were the sons of the emperor of the Romans, and had a teacher, called Arsenius; the teacher betook himself from the land of the Romans to Egypt, crossed this desert of Shîhât, there adopted the monastic life, and remained there till he died. He was an excellent man, and both the aforesaid sons of the emperor came to him during his life, and became monks at his hands. When they died their father sent and had the church of Baramûs built in their name.—Saint Moses the Black was a bold robber, who had murdered 100 men; then he adopted Christianity, became a monk, and wrote many books. He is one of those who kept the Forty Days' Fast entirely without food, and he was a Berber by race.

78. Monastery of Az-Zajâj (Glass). This stands outside Alexandria, and is also called Al-Hâbatân (sic), and bears the name of Saint George the Great. Formerly it was the invariable custom for the patriarchs [at their election] to betake themselves from the Mu'allakah at Miṣr to this monastery of Az-Zajâj, but now this is not done.—The above named are the monasteries of the Jacobites.

79. The women have also special convents, as the Convent of Nuns in the Hârah Zawîlah at Cairo, which is inhabited by virgins leading the religious life, and other Christian women.

80. The Dair al-Bandî in the quarter of the Romans (Hârat ar-Rûm), at Cairo, inhabited by nuns.

81. The Convent of Al-Mu'allakah in the city of Miṣr is the most famous convent of women, and is inhabited by them.

82. The Convent of Saint Barbara in Miṣr is near the Church of Barbara, and is inhabited by virgins who are becoming nuns. Barbara was a saint in the time of Diocletian, who had her tortured that she might give up her religion and worship idols; but she remained constant in her faith, and endured severe torments. She was a virgin, and when he despaired of her, he had her head struck off and a crowd of women beheaded with her.

83. The Melkite Christians have a cell belonging to their patriarch beside the Church of Michael near the Bridge of Afram outside Miṣr; it is the assembling-place for monks coming from the land of the Romans.

84. Monastery of Saint John the Dwarf, generally called Al-Kuṣayr. The correct pronunciation according to them is Al-Kaṣṭr, after the form shahâd, but it has been changed and is pronounced Al-Kuṣayyir. The Muslims call it Dair al-Kuṣair ('Monastery of the Small Fort'), as if it were a diminutive of kaṣr, 'castle;' but originally, as we have said, it was Dair al-Kaṣr, 'Monastery of the Dwarf,' the opposite of tawil, 'tall,' and it is also called the Monastery of Heraclius, and that of the Mule. It has already been described above. It was one of the largest monasteries of the Christians, but now there is only one man in it to guard it, and it is in the hands of the Melkites.

85. Monastery of At-Tūr. Ibn Sīdah says: At-Tūr means 'the Mountain,' and is especially used of Tūr Sīnā (Sinai), the mountain in Syria. In Syriac it is ܝܼܾܻܰ ܛܻܾܻ, and in derivation we say Tūrī or Tūrāt, 'a Turian.' Yâkūt says: There are seven places named Tūr: (1) Tūr Zaitā, in pronunciation like Zait, 'oil,' with final ā: the name of a mountain near Râs 'Ain; (2) Tūr Zaitā, likewise a mountain of Jerusalem, east of Siloah; (3) Tūr, name of a mountain rising above the city of Tiberias by the Jordan; (4) At-Tūr, name of a mountain in a district containing many towns or villages, in Egypt, to the south, between Miṣr and mount Fârān; (5) Tūr Sīnā, which according to various statements is a mountain near Ailah, or a mountain in Syria; and Sīnā is said to mean stones or trees there; (6) Tūr 'Abdīn, name of a mountain in the province of Nisibis, among the mountains which rise above this city, and are connected with mount Jûdâ; (7) Tūr Hārūn (i. e. of Aaron), the brother of Moses—Al-Wâhiḍî says in his commentary: Al-Kalbî and others say that 'the mountain,' in the word of God 'but behold the mountain,' is the largest mountain in Midian, called Zabfr. Al-Kalbî mentions that Tūr has its name from Yaṭur the son of Ishmael; on which As-Suhailî remarks that the Y perhaps has been dropped, if his statement is correct. 'Umar ibn Shaibah says: 'Abd al-'Azîz told me, [quoting] from Abû Ma'shar, from Sa'îd ibn Abî Sa'îd, from his father, from Abû Hurairah, that the Apostle of God said: There are four rivers in Paradise and four mountains and four battles; the rivers are Saīhân, Jaihân, the Nile, and the Euphrates; and the mountains are Sinai (At-Tūr), Lebanon, Uhûd, and Warîkân; as to the battles, he was silent. According to Ka'b al-Aḥbâr, the Muslims have three places of defence; their defence against the Romans is Damascus; that against Ad-Dajjâl is the Jordan; that against Yâjûj and Mâjûj is Sinai. Shu'bah says, quoting from Arṭâ'ah ibn al-Mundhir: When Yâjûj and Mâjûj marched forth, God declared to Jesus, son of Mary: See, I have caused one of my creatures to march forth, over whom none except me has any power; therefore go now with thy companions to the mountain of At-Tūr. Then he went thither accompanied by 12,000 followers. Ṭalq ibn Ḥabîb heard Zur'ah say: I wished to march out to Sinai, so I came to 'Abdallâh ibn 'Umar and told him this; whereupon he repeated: To three mosques the journey is difficult, to the Mosque of the Apostle of God (Medina), to the holy Mosque (Mecca), and to the most distant Mosque (Jerusalem); therefore now give up Sinai, for thou canst not reach it.—The Cadi Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad ibn Salāmah al-Kudā'i says, after describing the districts of Egypt: To the southern region belong the localities of the Hedjaz, namely, the district of Sinai and Fārān, the district of Rāyā and Al-Kulzum, the district of Ailah and its neighbourhood, Midian and its neighbourhood, Al-Uwaid and Al-Haurā and their neighbourhoods, and next the district of Badā and Shaghb. I remark: It is not disputed among Christian and Jewish writers that this Mount Sinai is that upon which or near which God instructed his prophet Moses. There is still there a monastery in the possession of the Melkites, peopled by monks, and owning a large garden with palms, vines, and other fruits.—Ash-Shābushtī says: Tûr Sînâ is the mountain upon which the light appeared to Moses so that he lost his consciousness. The monastery on the summit of the mountain is built of black stone, the thickness of its walls is seven cubits, and it has three iron doors, and on the west side there is a small door, before which a stone is erected which they can raise at pleasure; and when any visitor approaches they let it down, and the place is covered by it so that the position of the door is not detected. Within the monastery there is a spring, and without it another spring. The Christians state that there is a fire in the monastery like that fire which was at Jerusalem, of which every evening an equal quantity is consumed; it is white, small, of no great heat so that it burns nothing, but it grows stronger when a lamp is kindled at it. The monastery is inhabited by monks, is visited by the people, and is one of the monasteries which have been celebrated by poets. Ibn 'Āmir says of it—

it shines from that which is in thy monastery At-Tûr.
Does perchance the sun dwell there, forgetting his zodiacal signs, or has the moon removed and hidden herself therein?
Then he said: Neither sun nor moon dwells there, but wine-flasks have been brought thither to-day.'

I remark: Christian chroniclers relate that Justinian, emperor of the Romans at Constantinople, commanded the building of this monastery; a strong fortress was built within it, in the upper story of which were many cells; and a garrison, taken from the Arab tribe of Banū Šālih, was placed there to defend the monks; in the time of this emperor the fifth council of the Christians assembled. Between this place [Sinai] and Al-Kulzum, which was a town, there are two ways, one by land and the other by sea, both leading to the town of Fârân, one of the towns of the Amalekites, from which to At-Tûr there are two days' journeys: and from the city of Miṣr to Al-Kulzum there are three days' journeys. The mountain of At-Tûr is reached by 6,666 steps; in the midst of the mountain there was a church of the prophet Elias, and on the top a church bearing the name of Moses with pillars of marble and gates of brass; this is the place where God spoke with Moses, and the latter broke the tables. There was here only one monk for the service, and they state that none could pass the night here, but a place was prepared for him outside, where he passed the night. Nothing is now left of these two churches.

86. The Nuns' Convent in the Kaṣr ash-Shama', at Miṣr, bears the name of Saint George; here, before Islam, was the Nilometer, of which there are traces to this day.

These are all the monasteries possessed by the Christians, Jacobites, and Melkites, men and women, in Egypt; their number reaches the sum of eighty-six, of which eighty-two belong to the Jacobites and four to the Melkites.

ACCOUNT OF THE CHURCHES OF THE CHRISTIANS.

Al-Azharî says: The word Kantsah (church), or 'synagogue' of the Jews, in the plural Kand'is, is an Arabicised form, and the original form is *Kunish*¹. Even the more ancient Arabs mention churches in their poems; thus Al-'Abbâs ibn Mirdâs al-Sulamî says:

'They surround me in the shadow of every church;
as long as my people passed the night in the churches.'

And Ibn Kais ar-Rukayyât says:

'As if it were a picture painted in one of the churches.'

1. The Two Churches of Al-Khandak, without Cairo; one of which is named after the angel Gabriel; the other after Mercurius and also after Ruwais, the well-known monk who lived after A. H. 800. Near both of these churches the Christians buried their dead, and the place is called the Burial-place of Al-Khandak. Both of these churches were built in the time of Islam to take the place of the churches of Al-Maks.

2. The Church in the Hārah Zawīlah in Cairo, a church revered by the Jacobite Christians, bears the name of the Virgin; it is stated that it was formerly known by the name of the physician Zābilūn, who lived about 270 years before the appearance of the Islamic religion, was learned in many sciences, and possessed a great treasure reached through a well which exists here.

3. A Church known by the name of Al-Mughīthah in the Ḥārat ar-Rūm in Cairo bears the name of the Virgin. These two are the only churches that the Jacobites possess in Cairo. In the Ḥārat ar-Rūm there was another church, called the Church of Barbara, but this was destroyed in A. H. 718. The cause of this event was the Christians offered a petition to Al-Malik an-Nāṣir Muḥammad ibn Kalā'ūn, in which they begged for permission to restore that part of this church which had been ruined; he gave them permission, and they built the church so that it became more beautiful than it was before. This angered a number of Muslims, who represented to the Sultan that the Christians had erected a new building beside this church, which had not been there before. He therefore charged the Emir and Treasurer 'Ilm ad-Dîn Sanjar, Wâlî of Cairo, to destroy the newly-erected building; and the latter rode thither and found a crowd of Muslims assembled, who hastened to destroy the church altogether, as speedily as possible; they erected in its place a Mihrâb, announced the hours of prayer, and recited the Koran, all of their own accord, and they were not hindered for fear of an insurrection. After this the Christians were heavily oppressed; and they complained to the Cadi Karîm ad-Dîn, Keeper of the Sultan's Privy Purse, who stood up as the champion of the religion of his forefathers, and brought the matter constantly to the Sultan's notice, until the latter ordered the destruction of the Mihrâb, which was thrown down, so that the place became a rubbish-heap, and so it has remained.

4. Church of Saint Mennas. This stands near the dam between the mounds of earth on the road from Miṣr; it consists of three churches adjacent to one another; one of the Jacobites, one of the Syrians, and the third of the Armenians. A festival is kept there every year, at which the Christians assemble in this church.

5. The Church of Al-Mu'allakah, in the city of Miṣr, in the quarter of Kaṣr ash-Shama', named after the Virgin; it is highly revered among them, and is distinct from the above-mentioned Cell.

6. The Church of Saint Sinuthius in Miṣr, named after the ancient monk Sinuthius, of whom many things are related; among others, that he was one of those who entirely abstained from food during the Forty Days' Fast; under him there were 6,000 monks, who fed, as he did himself, on a mess of palm-leaves; he wrote many books.

7. Church of Mary, near the Church of Sinuthius. This was destroyed by 'Alî ibn Sulaimân ibn 'Alî ibn 'Abdallâh ibn 'Abbâs, Emir of Egypt, when he received the government from the Prince of the Faithful, Al-Hâdî Mûsâ, in A.H. 169; he also destroyed the churches of the Ward of Constantine, for the preservation of which the Christians offered him 50,000 dinars as a bribe, but he refused it. When he was removed, however, and Mûsâ ibn 'Isâ ibn Mûsâ ibn Muhammad ibn 'Alî ibn 'Abdallâh ibn 'Abbâs took his place in the caliphate of Hârûn ar-Rashîd, the new governor allowed the Christians to rebuild the churches which 'Alî ibn Sulaiman had destroyed; then they were all rebuilt in consequence of a decree of Al-Laith ibn Sa'd and 'Abdallâh ibn Lahî'ab, who both declared that it was for the advantage of the town, and bore witness that the churches at Miṣr had first been built under Islam in the time of the companions of the prophet and his first successors.

8. Church of Saint George of Ath-Thikat. This church stands in an alley of the quarter of Kaṣr ash-Shama' at Miṣr, which is called Alley of Ath-Thikat; not far from it is the Church of the Virgin of Saint George.

9. The Church of Barbara in Miṣr is large, and is celebrated among them; it is named after Saint Barbara, a nun. In her time two other nuns were living, Isā and Thaklā; a great festival is kept in their honour at this church, and the patriarch is present at it.

10. Church of Saint Sergius near Saint Barbara, not far from the Hospital of Ibn an-Nu'mān. There is a cave within it, in which Christ and his mother Mary are said to have sat.

11. Church of Babylon, south of Kaṣr ash-Shama', on the road of the Afram Bridge. This church is very old and small; below it the treasure of Babylon is said to be; its surroundings are in ruins.

12. The Church of Theodore the Martyr, in the neighbourhood of Babylon, is named after the martyr Theodore, the military commander.

13. The Church of Saint Mennas is also in the neighbourhood of Babylon. Both these churches are closed, on account of the ruins which surround them.

14. Church of Saint Mennas in the Ḥamrā; the Ḥamrā is now called the quarter of Kanāṭir as-Sabā', between Cairo and Miṣr. This church was restored in A. H. 177 by permission of the Emir of Egypt, Al-Walīd ibn Rufā'ah; thereupon Wuhaib al-Yahsubī was angry, rebelled against the Sultan, and came to Ibn Rufā'ah to assassinate him, but was seized and put to death; Wuhaib was a traveller from Yemen, and had come to Egypt. Then the Karā, in order to avenge Wuhaib, rose against Al-Walīd ibn Rufā'ah, and fought against him. Ma'ūnah, the wife of Wuhaib, went round at night to the settlements of the Karā to rouse them to avenge his blood; she had shorn her head, and was an eloquent woman. Then Ibn Rufā'ah seized Abū 'Isā Marwān ibn 'Abd ar-Rahmān al-Yahsubī from among the Karā; he asked for mercy, and Ibn Rufā'ah set him free; and subsequently the rebellion was put down after a great number had been slain. The church in the Ḥamrā remained standing until the destruction of the churches took place in the days of Al-Malik an-Nāṣir Muḥammad ibn Kalā'ūn, as it will be related, if it be God's will.

15. History of the Church of Az-Zuhrl, and account of the destruction of the churches in Egypt, and of the monasteries of the Christians all at one time.

The Church of Az-Zuhrl stood at the place where now the Pool of An-Nāṣir is, in the neighbourhood of Kanâfir as-Sabâ', on the western bank of the canal, west of Al-Lawâk; many events have taken place in connexion with this church. For when Al-Malik an-Nâṣir Muḥammad ibn Kalâ'ûn had in A. H. 720 built the hippodrome of the Mahârî Camels near Kanâfir as-Sabâ', he wished also to erect an embankment on the chief branch of the Nile not far from the Mosque of Taibars; he therefore commanded that a rubbish-heap which lay there should be carried away, and that the earth beneath it should be dug out for the sake of the embankment, and he caused the water to flow into the excavated place, which is therefore called to this day the pool of An-Nâṣir. The excavation of this pool was begun on the last day of the month of Rabî' I, A. H. 721; and when they brought it near to the Church of Az-Zuhîr at which many Christians had always dwelt, and beside which several other churches stood, on the spot now called Hakar Akbughâ, between the Seven Wells and the Bridge of the Dam outside the city of Miṣr, then the workmen began to dig round the Church of Az-Zuhîr, so that the latter remained standing in the middle of the spot which the Sultan had appointed for excavation and which is now the Pool of An-Nâṣir, and they continued to dig, until the church, as it were, hung in the air. The intention was that the church should fall without a direct attempt to destroy it. The general body of the slaves of the Emirs, who were working at the excavation, and the other workmen demanded, with incessant cries, permission to destroy the church, but the Emirs did not listen to them until Friday the 9th Rabî' II of the same year, while the people were performing the Friday prayers, when the work of excavation was interrupted, and a body of the common people, without leave from the Sultan, crying out 'God is Great!' attacked the Church of Az-Zuhîr with axes and other tools, destroyed it and made a rubbish-heap of it, plundered the Christians who were there, and carried off all that was within it. Then they destroyed the Church of Saint Mennas in the Ḥamrâ, which had from ancient times been much revered by the Christians; a number of Christians dwelt there, who had established themselves there, and to whom the Christians of Miṣr brought all that was needed for the church; they also sent there costly offerings and many alms, so that there was there a large treasure of coined money, golden vessels, and other valuables. The people climbed the walls, opened the gates, and took money, vessels, and wine-jars out of the church; it was a terrible occurrence.

Thereupon they went from the church in the Ḥamrâ, after they had destroyed it, to the two churches near the Seven Wells, one of which was called the Church of the Maidens, and was inhabited by a number of Christian girls and by monks ; they broke in the doors of the two churches, took captive the girls, of whom there were more than sixty, took off their clothes, plundered all that they could find, and burnt and entirely destroyed these churches.

All this took place while the people were making their Friday prayers ; and when they came out of the mosques, they beheld with horror the clouds of dust, the smoke of the fire, the tumult of the mob, and the hurrying throngs of those who were carrying off the plundered objects, so that this horror could only be compared with that of the day of resurrection. The news of it spread, and quickly came to the sandy ground under the Castle on the Mountain ; the Sultan heard a great tumult and noise which horrified him, and he sent to enquire into the cause of it. When he was told what had happened, he was much excited, and was angry that the people had undertaken to do the deed without his command. He ordered the Emir Aidughmish Amîr-Akhûr to ride to the spot with a detachment of pages, to put a stop to this disorder, and to seize those who had done the deed. While Aidughmish was making preparations to ride down, the news was brought from Cairo that the people of Cairo had risen and had destroyed a church in the quarter of the Romans and one in the quarter of Zawîlah ; and at the same time it was announced from Miṣr that the people of Miṣr had risen in great numbers and had marched to the Church of Al-Mu'allakah in the Kaṣr ash-Shâma', which had then been shut up by the Christians who were besieged within it, but it was on the point of being taken. Now the anger of the Sultan increased, and he wished to ride down in person to attack the people, but he refrained when the Emir Aidughmish dissuaded him from the attempt. The latter went from the Castle with four Emirs to Miṣr ; the two Chamberlains, the Emir Baibars and the Emir Alamâs, rode to the place which had been excavated ; and the Emir Tînâl rode to Cairo, each accompanied by a numerous troop. The Sultan had commanded that all whom they should capture among the people were to be slain, and none was to be pardoned ; so Cairo and Miṣr fell upon their knees, and the plunderers fled, so that the Emirs only caught those who were unable to move because they were overcome by the wine which they had drunk in the churches. The Emir Aidughmish now entered into Miṣr. The Wâlî had already ridden to the Mu'allakah to drive away those engaged in plunder from the street of the Mu'allakah, but, being received by a shower of stones, he had fled from them, and the gate of the church was on the point of being set fire to. Now the Emir Aidughmish and his followers drew their swords that they might fall upon the people, but when he found that there was an innumerable multitude and a narrow way of escape, he restrained from slaughter, bid his followers disperse the crowd without shedding blood, and proclaimed that any one who stayed behind should forfeit his life. Then the assembled crowd turned to flight and dispersed, but Aidughmish, fearing lest the people should return, remained there until the evening-prayer was proclaimed ; then he marched away, having ordered the Wâlî of Miṣr with his soldiers, to whom he added fifty of the pages, to pass the night on the spot. As for the Emir Alamâs, he came to the churches in the Ḥamrâ and the Church of Az-Zuhrf to defend them, but only rubbish-heaps were left of them, not a wall was standing ; he returned therefore, and the other Emirs also returned and informed the Sultan, whose anger continued to increase ; but they did not leave him until he was pacified.

At the destruction of these churches a wonderful event occurred. For when the people were assembled on that day in the Mosque of the Castle on the Mountain for the Friday prayer, and had just finished the prayer, a madman rose up and cried out in the midst of the mosque : ‘Destroy the church in the citadel, destroy it !’ and when he had repeatedly cried out in this disturbing fashion, he fell into convulsions. The Sultan and the Emirs wondered at his words, and orders were given to the officer on guard and the chamberlain to investigate the matter ; so they both left the mosque, and when they came to the Ruins of the Tartars in the citadel, where a newly-built church stood, there were people employed in destroying it, and they had not finished their work when the news of the attack upon the churches in the Ḥamrâ and at Cairo arrived. Then the Sultan wondered yet more at that fâkîr, and caused search to be made for him, but no trace of him was found. In the Mosque of Al-Azhar too it happened that when the people were assembled that day for the Friday prayers, one of the fâkîrs fell into a sort of trembling, and when the hour of prayer was announced, before the preacher appeared, he stepped forward and said : ‘Destroy the churches of the enemies and unbelievers ! God is great ! God grant victory and help !’ Then he began again to tremble, and cried out : ‘Down to the ground ! Down to the ground !’ The people looked at him and did not know what he meant ; they were of various opinions regarding him, some saying, ‘He is mad ;’ and others, ‘This means something.’ When the preacher came forward the fâkîr ceased shouting, and at the end of the prayers he was sought for but could not be found ; and when the people came out of the door of the mosque they saw the plunderers with the woodwork of the churches, the garments of the Christians, and other plunder, and when they asked about these things they were answered that the Sultan had proclaimed that the churches should be destroyed; and the people believed this until they heard soon afterwards that all had happened without orders from the Sultan. The churches destroyed that day at Cairo were that in the quarter of the Romans, that by the Archers, and two churches in the street of Zawflah.

On Sunday, the 3rd day after the Friday on which the destruction of the churches had taken place at Cairo and Miṣr, the news came from the Emir Badr ad-Dīn Bilbag al-Muhsanī, Wālī of Alexandria, that on Friday the 9th Rabi' II, after the Friday prayers, a tumult had arisen among the people, and when they had quitted the mosque, the cry arose: 'The churches are destroyed!' and that the Mameluke had at once ridden to the spot but had found the churches, four in number, already reduced to heaps; that he had also received by the pigeon-post a letter from the Wālī of Al-Buhairah, announcing that at the town of Damanhūr, while the people on that day were making their Friday prayers, two churches had been destroyed. The astonishment increased over these matters until on Friday, the 16th, news was brought from the town of Kūs that while the people on the 9th Rabi' II had finished their Friday prayers, one of the fak̄ırs had risen, and had said: 'O fak̄ırs! come out to the destruction of the churches!' but when they went out, followed by a crowd of others, they had found the churches already destroyed; and that at Kūs and in its immediate neighbourhood six churches had been wrecked. Gradually information arrived from the southern and northern provinces, announcing the destruction of many churches and monasteries in all the districts of Egypt between Kūs, Alexandria, and Damietta, which had taken place on the same day during and after the Friday prayers. The anger of the Sultan against the people reached its highest point, because he feared that even worse things would be done. The Emirs tried to soothe his anger, saying that matters of this sort could not have happened through human power, and that if the Sultan himself wished to undertake anything of the sort he would not be in a position to do so; but that it was a decree and ordinance of God, who knew the great corruption of the Christians and their increasing pride, so that that which had happened might serve as a punishment for them.

While therefore the people of Cairo and Miṣr had become much afraid of the Sultan, because they had heard that he had threatened them with death, and many of the lowest people had taken to flight, the Cadi and Army-Inspector Fakhr ad-Dīn tried to dissuade the Sultan from his intended attack on the people, and to reconcile him with them again, while Karīm ad-Dīn al-Kabīr, Keeper of the Privy Purse, incited the Sultan against the people, until the Sultan ordered him to travel to Alexandria for the purpose of raising money and of enquiring what churches were there destroyed.

Scarcely a month had passed by since the destruction of the churches when in Cairo and Miṣr fire broke out in many places, at which horrors occurred equal to those which followed the destruction of the churches. In a house of the Roast-meat-Vendors' Street in Cairo fire broke out on Saturday the 10th Jumādā I, and spread among the surrounding dwellings and lasted until the evening of Sunday; many buildings were destroyed. When this fire was extinguished, another arose in the quarter of Ad-Dailam in the street of Al-'Arīshah, near the dwelling of Karīm ad-Dīn, Keeper of the Privy Purse, on the 25th Jumādā I; it was a windy night, and the fire spread on all sides, until it reached the house of Karīm ad-Dīn. When the Sultan heard of this, he was much vexed, because a part of the Sultan's treasures was kept there, and he sent several of the Emirs to put it out, and they took with them a crowd of people which continually grew in numbers. From the night of Monday to that of Tuesday the fire had continually increased, and the Emirs with their followers could not extinguish it, because there was a strong wind by which lofty palms were overthrown and boats were dashed to pieces, and so the fire spread on all sides. The people were already convinced that the whole of Cairo would be burnt, and they mounted the minarets in order to call to prayer. The fakīrs and pious men appeared and began to pray with the cry: 'God is great!' but it was in vain, and the screams and weeping of men grew louder on all sides. The Sultan went up to the roof of the castle, but could not stay there on account of the strong wind; the fire lasted, and the Sultan repeated his command to the Emirs to extinguish it until Tuesday. Then the Sultan's Deputy went down and took all the Emirs and water-carriers with him; and the Emir and Cupbearer Baktimur also went down; it was a terrible day; none more terrible has ever been seen. At the gates of Cairo guards were set to bring back the water-carriers if they tried to leave Cairo, in order to extinguish the fire; not one of the water-carriers of the Emirs and of the city was spared, all had to work; and they brought the water from the academies and baths; all the carpenters and attendants of the baths were taken to pull down the houses, and in this time of necessity many lofty buildings and great houses were pulled down. At this fire twenty-four of the principal Emirs were working, besides an equal number of the Emirs of the band, the Decurions and the Mamelukes; and the Emirs themselves set their hands to the work. The water stood from the Gate of Zawilah to the quarter of Ad-Dailam like a lake in the street on account of the crowd of men and camels which brought water. The Emir and Cupbearer Baktimur and the Emir and Deputy Arghûn were employed in carrying the Sultan's treasure from the house of Karîm ad-Dîn to the house of his son in the Lead-workers' Street; sixteen houses which partly touched the house or stood opposite to it had to be destroyed before they could rescue the treasure.

The fire was not yet fully extinguished, the treasure was scarcely carried away, when a fresh fire broke out at the dwelling of Az-Zâhir before the Zawîlah Gate, which destroyed 120 houses; among which was a hall known as the Hall of the Fâkîrs. During the fire a strong wind blew; then the Chamberlain and the Wâli rode down to extinguish the fire, and caused a number of the surrounding houses to be pulled down until the fire was extinguished. Two days later a fire broke out in the house of the Emir Salâr in the street between the two castles; it began in the air-passage which had been constructed 100 cubits above the ground; but this was all destroyed before the fire was put out.

Then the Sultan commanded the Emir and Treasurer 'Ilm ad-Dîn Sanjar, Wâli of Cairo, and the Emir and Chamberlain Baibars to keep guard and to be watchful; it was proclaimed that in every shop a barrel or jar of water should stand, and a similar one in all streets, by-ways, and alleys. Through this the price of a barrel rose from one dirham to five, and the price of a jar to eight dirhams.

A fire also broke out in the quarter of the Romans and in many places, so that no day passed without a fire in some place. The people now took heed to that which was befalling them, and came to the conjecture that the Christians were the cause of it, because the fire appeared in the pulpits of the mosques and the walls of oratories and schools; they were therefore prepared at a certain fire, and they followed up the track of it until they found that it arose from naphtha rolled up in cloths steeped in oil and pitch. One Friday night in the middle of Jumâdâ, two monks were captured coming out of the Academy of Al-Hakkarîyah, and fire had just been set to the academy, and the smell of sulphur was still on their hands; they were brought to the Emir and Treasurer 'Ilm ad-Dîn, Wâli of Cairo, who sent word to the Sultan, who ordered that they should be tortured. He had not come down from the castle before people met him, who had seized a Christian caught in the Mosque of Az-Zâhir with rags in the form of an annular biscuit full within of pitch and naphtha; he had already thrown one of them down by the pulpit, and had stood by it until smoke rose from it; then he went to depart from the mosque; some one, however, had noticed him, and watched him from a place where the Christian could not see him; then he seized him, and the people came up in crowds and dragged him to the Wâli's house; he had dressed himself like the Muslims. He was then tortured before the Emir and Chamberlain Rukn ad-Dîn Baibars, and he confessed that a multitude of Christians had bound themselves to prepare naphtha and to spread it about by means of several of their followers, of whom he was one, and that he had been told to place it beside the pulpit of the Mosque of Az-Zâhir. Thereupon it was ordered that the two monks should be tortured, and they confessed that they were among the inhabitants of the Monastery of the Mule, and had set fire to the places already described, out of hatred to the Muslims and to take revenge upon them for the destruction of the churches; and that many Christians had joined together, and had collected a considerable sum to prepare this naphtha.

Meanwhile Karîm ad-Dîn, Keeper of the Privy Purse, had returned from Alexandria; and the Sultan informed him of the capture of the Christians, whereupon he answered: 'The Christians have a patriarch with whom they consult, and who knows their dispositions.' Then the Sultan commanded to bring the patriarch to the dwelling of Karîm ad-Dîn that he might speak with him of the fire, and the share of the Christians in kindling it. The patriarch came therefore under the guard of the Wâli of Cairo by night through fear of the people, and when he had entered the house of Karîm ad-Dîn, in the quarter of Ad-Dailam, and the three Christians had been brought from the dwelling of the Wâli, they repeated to Karîm ad-Dîn in the presence of the patriarch and Wâli all that they had before confessed. When the patriarch heard the confession, he began to weep, and said: 'These are fanatical Christians, who wished to avenge themselves on the fanatical Muslims on account of the destruction of the churches.' Thereupon he was released by Karîm ad-Dîn with ceremony, and found that Karîm ad-Dîn had caused a mule to be kept in readiness for him at the door, so that he might ride upon it; so he mounted and rode off; thereupon the people were angry and fell upon him together, and if the Wâli had not accompanied him he would have been slain.

Next morning Karîm ad-Dîn wished to ride, according to his custom, to the Castle, and when he came out of doors as usual, the people cried to him in the streets: 'It is not allowed, O Cadi, that thou shouldest take under thy protection the Christians who have burnt down the houses of Muslims, and shouldest let them ride upon mules.' These words angered him and increased his desire to do injuries, and when he came before the Sultan he tried to represent the crime of the Christians who had been captured as slight, saying that they were fanatics and fools; but the Sultan bade the Wâlî increase the tortures. So the Wâlî went down and caused them to be severely tortured, so that they confessed that fourteen monks had conspired together in the Monastery of the Mule to burn down all the dwellings of the Muslims, and that among them there was a monk who prepared the naphtha; that they had partitioned Cairo and Miṣr among themselves, so that eight came to Cairo and six to Miṣr. Then the Wâlî had the Monastery of the Mule surrounded and all its inmates seized; four of them were burnt at the cross-ways by the Mosque of Ibn Tâlûn on Friday, where a great crowd had assembled to see them. From this time the common people were enraged against the Christians, and began to insult them and tore their garments off them, so that every form of outrage was allowed, and such as exceeded all measure. Thereupon the Sultan grew angry, and formed the plan of making an attack upon the people. It happened that when he was riding on a Saturday from the citadel to go to the great hippodrome, he saw a great crowd of people who were filling the streets and shouting: 'God protect Islam! Protect the religion of Muḥammad ibn 'Abdallâh!' He rode aside to avoid them, and when he reached the hippodrome, the Treasurer brought two Christians to him who had just been caught in the attempt to set fire to the houses; he commanded that they should be burnt, whereupon they were led away, a ditch was dug, and they were burnt in the sight of the people. While they were yet employed in burning the two Christians, the Chamberlain of the Divan of the Emir and Cupbearer Baktimur, who was a Christian, came by, to reach the house of the Emir Baktimur. When the people saw him, they threw him from his beast, dragged off all his clothes, and carried him off to throw him into the fire; then he repeated in a loud voice the two formulas of belief, confessed Islam, and was set at liberty. Meanwhile Karīm ad-Dīn, clothed with a robe of honour, passed by the hippodrome; but they drove him away with stones, and cried out: 'How long wilt thou protect and defend the Christians?' They mocked at him, so that he saw no way of escape except to return to the Sultan, who was still in the hippodrome; the cries of the people were so loud in their anger that the Sultan could hear them. When Karīm ad-Dīn came to him and informed him of what had passed, he was full of wrath, and asked the advice of the Emirs who were with him, such as the Emir Jamāl ad-Dīn, deputy-governor of Al-Kark, the Emir Saif ad-Dīn al-Bûbakrî, the Chamberlain Baktimur, and several others; Al-Bûbakrî thought that the people * * * and that it was best for the Chamberlain to go and ask them what they wanted before any step was taken. This view, however, did not please the Sultan, who turned away from him. Thereupon the Deputy-governor of Al-Kark said: 'All this comes from the Christian secretaries, for the people hate them, and my advice is that the Sultan should take no step against the people, but should remove the Christians from the Divan.' This advice also displeased the Sultan, who said to the Emir and Chamberlain Alamâs: 'Go and take four of the Emirs with thee, and cut the people down from the place where thou leavest the hippodrome until thou comest to the Gate of Zawîlah, and strike with the sword among them from the Gate of Zawîlah to the Gate of Victory, without sparing any;' and to the Wâlî of Cairo he said: 'Ride to the Gate of Al-Lawâk and the neighbourhood of the river, and let none pass without seizing him and bringing him to the Castle, and if thou dost not bring those who have stoned my deputy (he meant Karim ad-Dîn), by my head I will hang thee instead of them;' and he sent with him a detachment of his body-Mamelukes. After a hesitation on the part of the Emirs to carry out the command, so that the matter became known, and they met no one, especially no slaves or attendants of the Emirs, then at last they set out; the news was spread in Cairo, all the bazaars were shut, and an unheard-of sorrow fell upon the people. The Emirs went forth, but found on their long march not a single person until they reached the Gate of Victory; but the Wâlî at the Gate of Al-Lawâk in the neighbourhood of Bûlâk and at the Water-Gate seized a crowd of rabble, sailors, and low people, by which action such fear was spread that a great number removed to the province of Al-Jîzah on the western bank. The Sultan returned from the hippodrome and found on his way, until he reached the Castle, not one of the people; as soon as he arrived at the Castle he sent to the Wâlî, and told him to hasten to come to him; and the sun was not yet set when he appeared with about 200 people whom he had seized. Then the Sultan made a division of them, and ordered that some should be hanged, others cut in two, others deprived of their hands; then they all cried: 'O Lord, that is not lawful, it was not we who stoned him.' The Emir and Cupbearer Baktimur and the other Emirs present wept out of sympathy with them, and did not quit the Sultan until he said to the Wâlî: 'Divide off a part of them and erect posts from the Gate of Zawîlah to the Castle in the Horse-Market and hang them up by their hands.' Next morning, being Sunday, they were all hung up from the Gate of Zawîlah to the Horse-Market, some of them being distinguished and well-dressed persons; the Emirs who passed by them expressed sympathy with them, and wept over them. None of the shop-owners of Cairo and Miṣr opened his shop that day. Karīm ad-Dīn left his dwelling to go to the Castle as usually, but he could not go past those who were hanged up, and so he took another way, not that through the Gate of Zawfīlah. The Sultan was already sitting behind a lattice, and caused a number of those whom the Wālī had captured to be brought and the hands and feet of three of them to be cut off. The Emirs could not speak in their favour because his anger was too hot; then Karīm ad-Dīn entered, bared his head, kissed the earth, and begged for mercy; the Sultan at last yielded to his prayers, and ordered that the prisoners should work at the excavation at Al-Jīzah. Then they were led away; but two of the mutilated had already died; and those who were hung up were taken down from the posts.

While the Sultan still stood at the lattice, the cry of fire arose in the neighbourhood of the Mosque of Ibn Ṭūlūn, and in the Castle on the Mountain, in the dwelling of the Emir Rukn ad-Dīn al-Āḥmadī in the street of Bahā ad-Dīn, in the inn before the Water-Gate of Al-Maḳṣ and in the adjacent buildings. On the morning of this day three Christians had been caught, with whom cords steeped in naphtha were found, and when brought before the Sultan they confessed that they had caused the fire. The fire lasted at those places until Saturday, and when the Sultan, according to his custom, wished to ride to the hippodrome, he met 20,000 people who had coloured pieces of stuff blue, and had made a white cross upon them, and when they saw the Sultan they cried with loud and united voices: 'There is no religion except that of Islam! God protect the religion of Muhammad ibn 'Abdallāh! O Malik an-Nāṣir, Sultan of Islam! help us against the unbelievers, and do not protect the Christians!' The earth trembled with their terrible voices, and God filled the heart of the Sultan and the hearts of the Emirs with fear; they continued their way, while he was deeply sunk in thought, until he came to the hippodrome. As meanwhile the shouts of the people did not cease, he held it best to act cautiously, and he bid the Chamberlain go out and proclaim that he who should find a Christian should demand money and blood from him. The Chamberlain went out and made this proclamation, and the people cried: 'God protect thee!' and gave him their congratulations. The Christians then used to wear white turbans, so it was proclaimed at Cairo and Miṣr that any one who should find a Christian in a white turban should be allowed to kill him and to seize his goods; and a similar permission was granted to any one who should meet a Christian on horseback. A decree was issued that the Christians should wear blue turbans, and that none of them should ride a horse or a mule, but that they might ride asses with their heads to the tail; that no Christian might enter a bath without a bell round his neck; and that none of them might wear the dress of the Muslims. The Emirs were forbidden to take Christians into their service; the latter were removed from the Sultan's Divan, and it was commanded in all the provinces that all Christians holding office should be dismissed. The attacks of the Muslims upon the Christians increased so that the latter no longer walked in the streets, and a large number of them accepted Islam.

Nothing had been said at this time of the Jews, and so the Christians began, when they wished to leave their dwellings, to borrow a yellow turban from one of the Jews, and to wear it so as to be safe from the people. Then it happened that one of the Christians in the Divans was owed 4,000 dirhams by a Jew, so he came by night in disguise to the Jew's house to demand the money; then the Jew seized him and cried: 'Help from God and the Muslims!' and shouted so that people ran together to seize the Christian; but he fled into the inner part of the Jew's house and hid himself with the wife of the latter; he was, however, obliged to write a receipt stating that the Jew had paid him his debt, and then he was set free.

Several Christians of the Monastery of Al-Khandak were accused of having prepared naphtha to set fire to the houses; they were captured and nailed up. A decree was issued that the people might safely be present when the Sultan rode to the hippodrome according to their custom; this took place because they stood in fear of their lives on account of their having too frequently attacked the Christians and overstepped all bounds. Now they became bold, came as usually to the neighbourhood of the hippodrome, offered good wishes to the Sultan, and began to cry: 'God protect thee, Ruler of the land! we are spared, we are spared!' The Sultan heard this favourably and smiled at their words. At night a fire arose at the dwelling of the Emir and Chamberlain Alamâs in the Castle; the wind was strong, so that the fire took hold and reached the house of the Emir İtmish, and the inhabitants of the Castle and of Cairo were so much terrified that they believed that the whole Castle was burnt.

More terrible events than these have never been heard of, for the Christians burnt the houses at Cairo in the Roast-meat-Vendors' market and the alley of Al-'Arîshah in the street of Ad-Dailam, sixteen houses near the dwelling of Karîm ad-Dîn, a number of houses in the quarter of the Romans, the house of Bahâdur near the Chapel of Husain, some dwellings at the stable of At-Târimah and in the street of Honey, the palace of the Emir Silâh, and the palace of the Emir Salâr in the street between the two castles, the palace of Bîsharî, the Khân al-Hajar, Al-Jamalûn, the hall of Al-Afram, the house of Baibars in the street of Aş-Sâlihiyah, the house of Ibn Al-Maghribî in the street of Zawîlah, many dwellings in the street of the Swallows' Well and at Al-Hakar, in the Castle on the Mountain, by several mosques and oratories and other buildings, which it would take too much space to mention.

Among the churches, destruction was wrought on the church at the Ruins of the Tartars in the Castle of the Mountain, the Church of Az-Zuhrf on the spot where the Pool of An-Nâşir now is, the Church of the Hamrâ, a church near the Seven Wells, which is called that of the Daughters, the Church of Saint Mennas, the Church of Al-Fahhâdîn (the Trainers) at Cairo, a church in the quarter of the Romans, a church near the Archers, two churches in the quarter of Zawîlah, a church near the Flag-Store, a church at Al-Khandâk; four churches in the frontier-city of Alexandria, two churches in the town of Damanhûr Al-Wâhsh, a church in the province of Al-Gharbîyah, three churches in the province of Ash-Sharkiyah, six churches in the province of Al-Bahnâsâ; at Suyût, Mansalût, and Munyat Ibn al-Khaṣîb eight churches, at Kûş and Aswân eleven churches, in the province of Itfîh one church; in the market-place of Wardân in the city of Mîṣr, in the quarters of Al-Muṣâṣah and Kaṣr ash-Shama' at Mîṣr eight churches. A great number of monasteries also were destroyed, and the Monastery of the Mule and the Monastery of Shahrân remained long deserted. These important events, such as could with difficulty be found a second time during a long series of years, took place in a short space of time; so many persons perished, so much property was destroyed, and so many buildings ruined that for their multitude they cannot be described. The end of all things rests with God!

16. Church of Michael. This church was by the canal of the Banî Wâ'il before the city of Mîṣr to the south of 'Akâbah Yaḥṣub, and is now near the Bridge of Al-Afram; it was newly built under Islam, and is of fine architecture.

24. Church of Michael, also at Ikhmîm. There is a custom among the Christians at these two churches that when they are keeping the Feast of Palms, also called the Feast of Hosanna, the priests and deacons go in procession with censers, incense, crosses, the gospels, and lighted candles, and stand before the door of the Cadi, and then before the doors of the most respectable Muslims, where they burn incense, read a passage of the Gospel, and sing a hymn, that is to say, praise him.

25. The Church of Saint Pachomius, in the district of Atsah, is the last church on the eastern bank. Bakhûm or Pachomius was a monk at the time of Saint Sinuthius; he is called the Father of the Community, because he increased the number of the monks and gave a teacher to every two monks. He did not allow wine or meat to be brought into his monastery, and he commanded that the fast should be kept until the end of the ninth hour of the day; he gave his monks roasted chickpeas to eat, and they called them chickpeas of scarcity. His monastery has long been destroyed, but this church of his still exists at Atsâ, to the south of Ikhmîm.

In this district there were 160 churches, which have all been destroyed with the exception of the four above mentioned; the greater part of the inhabitants of Ishnîn are Christians, and they maintain themselves by keeping watch over the palm-trees. Further on there are still remains of churches in which they keep their festivals, as the Church of Saint George, that of Mârâtâ, that of Barbara, and that of Gafîl, i.e. Jabrîl (Gabriel).

40. In Munyat ibn Khasib there are six churches, that of Al-Mu'allakah, i.e. the Church of the Virgin, that of Peter and Paul, that of Michael, that of Saint George, that of Saint Paul of Tamwaih, and that of the three youths, namely, Ananias, Azarias, and Misael, who were warriors in the time of Bukht Naṣr (Nabuchadnezzar) and worshipped God in secret; when they were discovered Bukht Naṣr wished to bring them back to the worship of idols, and when they refused this he had them thrown into prison for a long time that they might be perverted; but they would not, and so he had them brought out and cast into the fire, which, however, did not burn them. The Christians hold them in great honour, although they lived long before the time of Christ.

In the district of Rîfah al-Gharbî is the Church of Saint Coluthus, who was a physician and monk, and performed wonderful cures of inflammation of the eye ; a festival is held in his honour at this church. 61. In the district of Mûshah there is a church built over a bath, in the name of the martyr Victor; it was built in the time of Constantine, son of Helena, and has a terrace ten cubits wide, and three domes, each of which is about eighty cubits high; the whole is built of white stone; but the western half is already fallen. It is said that this church stands over a treasure which lies beneath it; and it is said that there was a passage under the earth from Suyût to this town of Mûshah.

62. In the district of Bûkûr, at the border of Bûtîj, there is an old Church dedicated to the martyr Claudius, who stands among them on a par with Mercurius, Georgius i.e. Bû Jurj, the commander Theodorus, and Minâ'ûs. The father of Claudius was one of the prefects of Diocletian, and he was himself celebrated for his bravery. When he became a Christian, the emperor had him seized and tortured that he might return to the worship of idols, but he remained steadfast until he was killed. Many things are related of him.

63. In the district of Al-Kaftîah there is a Church named after the Virgin, where there was a bishop named Alduwîn, who had a quarrel with his own party, so that they buried him alive; they are among the worst Christians, and are notorious for their wickedness. There was among them a Christian named George, son of the Nun, who overstepped all bounds, so that the Emir and Majordomo Jamál ad-Dîn cut off his head in the reign of Al-Malik an-Nâṣir Faraj ibn Barkûk.

64. In the district of Bûtîj there are several ruined churches; and the Christians are accustomed to say their prayers secretly in one of their houses, and when day breaks, they go out to the ruins of a church, there erect an altar of palm-stems in the form of a cage, and perform their devotions.

The last was a rich man of Antioch, who became a monk, divided all his goods among the poor, and travelled through the world; and he confessed the Christian religion. His father consoled himself on his son's account, and it was believed that he was dead. Afterwards he came back to Antioch in such a condition that no one knew him; he lived in a cell on a dunghill, and fed upon that which was thrown upon the dunghill until he died. At his funeral his father was present and recognized the cover of his book of the gospels, and on further examination found that it was his son; so he buried him, and built in his name the Church of Antioch and that of the Virgin in the town of Kist.

72. At Asfûn there were several churches which were destroyed with the town; in the town of Kûş also there were many monasteries and churches which were destroyed with the town, so that only one Church of the Virgin is now remaining.

Besides the churches hitherto mentioned by us there is none remaining in the southern provinces. As for the northern provinces there is at Munyah Şurad in the district of Cairo a Church of the Virgin Mary, which is famous among them; in the district of Sanduwah a new church named after Saint George; at Marşâfâ a restored church also named after Saint George; at Samannûd a church named after the Apostles, built in a house; at Sanbât a church celebrated among them and named after the Apostles; at Sandafâ a church revered among them and named after Saint George; at Ar-Raidânîyah a Church of the Virgin, highly revered among them. As for the Melkites, they possess at Cairo the Church of Saint Nicholas near the Archers, and at Miṣr the Church of the Angel Gabriel in the quarter of Kaṣr ash-Shama', where the cell of their patriarch is, the Church of the Virgin also in the Kaṣr ash-Shama', the Church of the Angel Michael near the Church of Barbara at Miṣr, and the Church of Saint John in the quarter of the Monastery of At-Tin.

INDEX OF CHURCHES AND MONASTERIES
ACCORDING TO ABŪ ŠĀLIH, enumerating not only the churches contained within the walls of monasteries, but also the satellite churches or chapels. It is assumed that each monastery must contain one church if more are not named. It must be remembered that the churches and monasteries of the greater part of Lower Egypt, Cairo, and the Wâdî Habib are not described, although some of them are incidentally named, in the existing portion of the work. The folios of the original MS., marked at the side of the text and translation, are here given.
